U. S. Abrogates 1911 Treaty With Japan

A. M. A. Cleared Of Violating Anti-Trust Act

Medicine No Trade, Not Covered by Law, Court Rules; U. S. To Speed Appeal

(Text of Decision—Page 9.)

By Dillard Stokes

The practice of medicine was held "not a trade" and medical organizations and individual physicians charged by the Government with violation of the Sherman antitrust act were exonerated yesterday when Justice James M. Proctor sustained demurrers to an indictment.

The decision was a victory for organized medicine against charges by the Department of Justice that it was in conspiracy against the Group Health Association.

It also climaxed a year-long battle of acrimonious nature bitterly fought on both sides. Indictments were returned last December against four medical bodies and 21 leading physicians.

The Department of Justice last night indicated an appeal will be taken, from Justice Proctor's decision directly to the Supreme Court, if possible, from the District Court.

The department said its exact plan will be announced within ten days. Unless a process is found to bring the case before the Supreme Court it must first go to the District Court of Appeals.

As medicine is not a trade, Justice Poctor ruled, those who practice it cannot be punished for "restraint of trade."

U. S. Retorts

The Department of Justice retorted, in a statement last night, that the ruling meant that "physicians are entitled to conspire with and boycott hospitals in order to exclude other members of their profession from the pursuit of their calling."

"It is important to inform physicians generally," the statement said, "that until the Supreme Court has acted, the Government's prosecution policy toward boycotts in the medical profession is unchanged.

"No reasoning of the opinion persuades the department that doctors are free to engage in practices which would be illegal if they belonged to any other calling. In addition, any other restraints of the character included in the indictment will also be subject to prosecution.

Wording Held Fatal

"It is important that physicians not be misled on this point, because the District Court opinion is not a binding authority on other judges."

Justice Proctor stated that the indictment which he dismissed was so badly drawn that its defects were fatal. If individual physicians were injured by the defendants, he added, their remedy would be a civil suit and not a criminal prosecution. The department's reply said the physicians "were at no time in the dark as to the character of the charges against them."

The District Medical Society, in a statement by Dr. Francis X. McGovern, chairman of its executive board and himself one of the indicted physicians, hailed the opinion as "learned, courageous and frank."

Unaffected, Says G. H. A.

Cameron G. Garman, president of Group Health Association, said the opinion would have no effect upon the association's development. He revealed that six Washington hospitals, Emergency, George Washington, Columbia, Garfield, Episcopal and Children's, now have extended their facilities to some, if not all, G. H. A. physicians.

The prosecution grew out of disputes over formation of a group medical corporation by employes of Home Owners Loan Corporation. The health unit employed physicians and undertook to supply medical care to members who paid fixed dues every month.

GHA complained that organized medicine, urged on by the American Medical Association, harassed it with lawsuits, threatened its staff

$1,000 Earners To Get Food Surplus Stamps

Wallace Puts Plan Into Effect in Test At Shawnee, Okla.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace yesterday opened the door to an extension of relief through surplus food donations to families with incomes from private employment ranging up to about $1,000 per year.

Shawnee, Okla., a small city of 23,000, has been selected for the test. Nonrelief families whose incomes would place them among the "submerged one-third" will be permitted to buy the Agriculture Department's orange-colored food stamps, and to receive free the blue stamps which entitle the holder to certain surplus agricultural food products.

Blue stamps will be issued in an amount equal to one-half the orange stamp purchases. This is the system employed in making donations of surplus food products to relief families in Rochester, N. Y.; Dayton, Ohio; Birmingham, Ala.; Des Moines, Iowa, and Seattle, Wash.

Extension of the surplus food donations—a device for helping to dispose of agricultural surpluses—to nonrelief families is provided for in the Agriculture Department appropriation act passed by Congress at this session.

This legislation is an outgrowth of a great deal of criticism from people who see their next door neighbors living on the Govern-

104 Indicted In Harlan Battle

Harlan, Ky., July 26 (AP).—A special grand jury indicted 104 persons today on charges resulting from a battle between National Guardsmen and United Mine Workers (C. I. O.) pickets June 14. The jury recommended bonds totaling $535,000.

Two hundred and sixty-one persons were arrested following the clash in which two miners were killed and several shot or beaten.

Barkley Asks Lending Bill Be Modified

News From the Hill

RULES COMMITTEE to release today the bill doubling loan capacity of the USHA, it is learned. Page 2.

C. I. O. leaders continue attack on proposed changes in labor relations act, although there is little chance of amendments reaching a vote at this session.

The Lending Bill

A coalition assault on the President's $2,490,000,000 spending bill thundered in the Senate for nearly 12 hours yesterday as an echoing bipartisan House rumbling threatened indefinite delay in that chamber.

The Senate finally adjourned at 10:20 p. m. after the first night fight on the measure brought opposition speeches from half a dozen Republicans and a frontal attack by Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia.

As debate closed for the night, Senate Majority Leader Barkley, who almost single-handed faced the brunt of the attack, offered additional modifying amendments.

Toll Roads Cut Out

In effect, they would eliminate power for the Federal Government to build toll highways without the consent of the State commission, and provide for the States taking over maintenance and repair of the new roads and adjacent acquired property. Means of financing such projects, whether by tolls or otherwise, would be left strictly up to the States.

Earlier Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, proposed a "compromise" amendment "in order that the competitive system of private enterprise for profit shall be maintained and encouraged" by the program.

Rail Loans Planned

The O'Mahoney amendment stipulated that loans be so administered as not to promote undertakings in fields already adequately supplied by private enterprise, unless, in non-competitive enterprises, reasonable offer is made to acquire the facilities and is turned down.

It was learned last night that another amendment is being drawn by an independent group of Senators under which railroads could borrow RFC funds to buy up their bonds selling far below par, pay cash and preferred stock to their bondholders, and thus reduce annual fixed charges.

Led by Taft and Townsend

Senator Taft, of Ohio, and Senator Townsend, of Delaware, led last night's Republican onslaught against the program, with Senators Barbour, of New Jersey; Davis, of Pennsylvania, and Danaher, of Connecticut, participating. Previously Senator Byrd for an hour had criticized the program as a spending "masquerade."

Taft called the self-liquidating feature "a veneer and a fraud" and said it would be like former pump-priming programs—"the water goes down the pump and nothing comes back."

"Municipalities can borrow freely from the public today if they wish to do so," said Taft. "So can the railroads on equipment trusts . . . I venture to say it will be many long years before any of these so-called borrowers will be able to pay anything to the Government on their loans. We can practically

100 Playgrounds Still Locked, D. C. Children Romp in Streets

Thousands of District children continued yesterday to play on or near traffic crowded streets not far from more than 100 locked playgrounds, while recreation officials discussed plans for a "long term" play program.

Conferences between officials are scheduled for this week and next, but the tally of actual accomplishments in the opening of play spots has produced more than one protest from District parents.

Public statements urging action have been isued by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, Superintendent of Police; Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education; William A. Van Duzer, Traffic Director; Whitney Leary, chairman of the Commissioners' traffic advisory council, and private citizens.

After the first protests against further padlocking of playgrounds, it was announced that at least ten would be opened of the 112 still closed at that time. Four of the designated ten were opened on July 21. The other six are still closed. They are all in areas where there is heavy traffic congestion, and have been admitted by Recrea-

Police Say 7 Felons Circled Near Rapidan

All Roads in 20-Mile Area Patrolled by Troopers, D. C. Officers, Volunteers; Convicts Beat Guards, Seize Woman, Escape in Car

By the Associated Press.

Culpeper, Va., July 26.—Virginia State troopers said tonight they believed they had surrounded in a 20-mile area between Madison Courthouse and Rapidan seven Federal prisoners who overpowered four guards and escaped from a bus near Thornburg this morning.

All roads bordering the heavily wooded area, which lies along the watershed of the Rapidan River, were patrolled by State troopers, several members of the District of Columbia Metropolitan Police Department and more than a score of volunteer possemen from Culpeper and Orange.

The volunteers were armed with rifles obtained from the Culpeper Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. While some patrolled roads in the vicinity, others were slowly converging toward the center of the area in which the fugitives, several armed with pistols, were believed surrounded.

Maj. Roy P. Bishop, head of the Virginia State Police, said at Richmond that in addition, patrols were being maintained on highways from Roanoke to Richmond to Washington and "back down the Valley."

Treated Her Kindly

At daylight tomorrow troopers will make an "intensive search" of the heavily wooded area in which the fugitives were reported surrounded, he said.

An automobile answering the description of the car in which the prisoners escaped was reported seen at Rapidan at 9 p. m.

The fugitives, members of a group of 22 being transferred from Atlanta to Pennsylvania, handcuffed the guards, stretched them on the bus floor and then drove over side roads

American Frees Wife From Russia

New York, July 26 (INS).—The four-year fight of an American engineer against Soviet Russia's refusal to let his young wife join him in America came to a victorious climax today as the pretty, dark-haired wife stepped from the S. S. Champlain and into his arms.

Edmund Ruzanski went to Russia as an engineer in 1931. In 1933, at Baku, he met Tamara Berbin, 19-year-old librarian, and on March 31, 1934, they were married.

In October, 1935, he was ordered to leave Russia. No cause was given. Officials refused to allow his wife to renounce Russian citizenship.

For four years he campaigned for his wife's release, at one time picketing the Soviet embassy in Washington until police stopped him.

Last February he won the attention of Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, who drew up a petition to Secretary of State Hull, pointing out that under "our law," the girl should be allowed to come to the United States.

Then, on June 28, a cable from Moscow, said: "Leaving for Warsaw first July. Send money care of consulate—Tamara."

Hiker Admits Slaying Aide Of Pendergast

Schneider Thrown Off Bridge While Resisting Robbery, Man Says

By the United Press.

Clinton, Ill., July 26.—A hitchhiker who identified himself as George Carson, 38, Winston, Mo., confessed today, police said, that he killed Edward L. Schneider, Kansas City lieutenant of Tom Pendergast, whose body was found in the Missouri River May 5.

Sheriff Claude Barrett said Carson confessed he threw Schneider into the river during a fight that ensued when he attempted to rob Schneider.

Schneider had disappeared from Kansas City after Pendergast was indicted by a Federal grand jury on income tax evasion charges.

Carson was arrested on suspicion today while he was hitch-hiking north of here. Barrett said he made an oral confession in connection with the Schneider slaying and had agreed to put it in writing.

Barrett said Carson related that Schneider had picked him up while he was hitch-hiking from Coffeyville, Kans. Carson said he was carrying a gun he had stolen from a Denver pawnshop and that when they approached a bridge, he attempted to rob Schneider.

The two men struggled in the automobile, Barrett quoted Carson, and when Schneider stopped his car the battle continued on the bridge. Finally, Carson said, he hurled Schneider into the river.

During the search for Schneider, Federal authorities found his automobile on the bridge and theorized he had parked it there to give the impression he had committed suicide so he could avoid appearing at Pendergast's trial.

Elliott Roosevelt's Wife to Buy Station

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Communications Commission yesterday authorized Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt to acquire all the outstanding common stock of the Tarran Broadcasting Co., licensee of radio station KTAT, Fort Worth, Tex., from Raymond E. Buck for $101,570.

The authorization was contingent upon the surrender of the license for station KFJZ, also at Fort Worth, of which Mrs. Roosevelt is president and director. It is proposed to make KTAT the key station of the Texas State network, which is headed by Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President.

British Pact With Soviet Near Signing

London and Paris Prepared to Share Arms Secrets; 7 of 8 Points Agreed On

By John Elliott.
Special Cable to The Post.

Paris, July 26.—With Great Britain and France prepared to share their military secrets with Soviet Russia, Paris tonight expected conclusion of the long-sought three-power alliance within 48 hours.

Informed quarters say that on seven of the eight points in the pact, agreement has already been obtained.

The single stumbling block is known to be London's hesitancy to agree to Moscow's demand that the protracted alliance operate automatically even in the case of "indirect aggression" or "aggression from within."

Such an arrangement, in the view of the British government, might open the way for too much meddling in the domestic affairs of a minor European power. For example, it is suggested, Moscow might demand immediate tri-power intervention under the alliance if Latvia or Estonia were to establish a full-fledged Nazi regime on the German model.

Concessions Hinted

There was a hint today in Soviet quarters in London that in the end Moscow might make some slight concessions in the negotiations on this point. British quarters, however, warned that these hints should be accepted with reserve.

In Paris, it was hoped the matter might be ironed out in conferences between British, French and Soviet negotiators in Moscow, probably tomorrow.

The optimistic reports of a pending agreement, after so many setbacks, has had an encouraging repercussion in Paris, where the effects were felt on the Bourse today.

This development is coupled here with the situation in the Far East, following the British concessions to Japan, which is believed to have assured Japanese neutrality in case of a European conflict.

The net result of these events, it is believed, should be to deter Fuehrer Hitler from carrying out the coup that he has been meditating to incorporate Danzig into the Third Reich.

Spanish Neutrality Sought

With Soviet Russia seemingly on the point of entering the peace front, French diplomacy is now turning its efforts to insure Spanish neutrality in the event of conflict, so that France will have only two frontiers to defend. An important gesture toward rapprochement was made today when a Paris court decided the Spanish gold deposited by the Republican government with the Bank of France should be returned to the Bank of Spain. This gold, which amounts to some 1,500,000,000 francs ($39,730,000), is to be returned to Spain immediately.

Marshal Petain, French Ambassador in Burgos, has been pressing for the return of this Spanish gold, contending it would strengthen those elements in Spain that want their country to be neutral in the next war.

Moscow "Council of War"

Special Cable to The Post.

London, July 26.—The allied strategy in a hypothetical European-wide conflict precipitated in case of a new aggression engineered by Fuehrer Hitler will be a primary subject of consideration at a "council of war" in Moscow within the next few weeks, in which high-ranking officers of the British, French and Soviet armies, navies and air forces will participate.

With disclosure that Britain and France are dispatching military

A Washington man, victim of heat prostration, was injured when the Bladensburg Rescue Ambulance, taking him to Casualty Hospital late yesterday, collided head-on with an automobile.

Three other persons were overcome by Washington heat, which sent the mercury to 92 at 3:10 p. m., within one degree of the highest temperature this month, recorded July 8.

In Northeastern States, where less than a half inch of rain has fallen in ten days, conditions are reaching "serious proportions," the Weather Bureau reported last night. New York State appeared hardest hit, with crops scorched, forest fires more menacing and wells and streams at low levels.

From Maine to eastern Pennsylvania, crop conditions became acute. In parts of New Jersey, where only 3 inches of rain immediately will save their crops, farmers hopefully watched black storm clouds gather yesterday and felt the promise of moisture in the wind. Lightning blazed across the sky and started a forest fire in the pine barrens of

Pact Abrogated

By William V. Nessly.

The United States last night notified Japan this country was abrogating the American-Japanese treaty of commerce and navigation signed in 1911.

It thus cleared the way for imposition of an embargo on American supplies used by Japan in her war on China, if such action is decided on.

Six months' notice of abrogation is required by the treaty. Thus, the agreement will die next January, near the start of the next session of Congress.

The action apparently constituted one of the "steps short of war" which President Roosevelt has said are available to curb the activities of aggressor nations.

Formal notice of this country's intent was handed to Yakichiro Suma, counsellor of the Japanese embassy, yesterday afternoon by Assistant Secretary of State Sayre, in charge of commercial treaties. News of the action was withheld until 10 p. m. at the Japanese request that time be granted for transmission of the notice to the foreign office at Tokyo.

Roosevelt, Hull Confer

Decision to denounce the treaty was transmitted after President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull had conferred yesterday morning. Though Secretary Hull had indicated there might be some developments from the conference, the Capital was caught by surprise as word of the action swept across the city.

The Senate, holding a night session on the Administration's lending bill, was completely unprepared for the news.

Only yesterday morning the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had deferred action on a resolution by Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, declaring it the sense of the Senate that the President should abrogate the treaty. Members of the committee said more time was desired to study the changed conditions in the Far East caused by Great Britain's agreement to recognize that Japan has "special requirements" in China.

Text of Hull's Note

The note of abrogation, signed by Secretary Hull and addressed to Ambassador Kensuke Horinouchi, at present away on vacation, read:

"July 26, 1939.

"Excellency:

"During recent years the Government of the United States has been examining the treaties of commerce and navigation in force between the United States and foreign countries with a view to determining what changes may need to be made toward better serving the purposes for which such treaties are concluded. Bombs Kill 2 Britons, Block Leeds Canal

Deaths in London Are The First Attributed To Irish Terrorists

By the Associated Press.

London, July 26.—An outbreak of bombings attributed to the Irish Republican Army today wrecked a canal bridge near Liverpool, shattered baggage checkrooms in two of London's largest railway stations, and tore the front from a Liverpool district postoffice.

Spurred by the blasts at King's Cross and Victoria Railway stations, in which two persons were fatally injured and nearly a score of others hurt, the House of Commons approved without division a bill to curb the I. R. A., and sent it to the House of Lords.

The Liverpool explosions occurred several hours after the London blasts. Destruction of the wooden swing bridge at Liverpool blocked the Leeds Liverpool Canal.

Throughout England thousands of police were hurried to vital points to protect them against terrorism, following the two railway station explosions.

The first explosion, just after noon at King's Cross Station, fatally injured Dr. Donald Campbell, a lecturer at Edinburgh University, and William Kent, the baggageroom attendant.

The fatalities were the first in London attributed to I. R. A. terrorism.

Britain to Start Fast Air Service

London, July 26 (AP).—The British Air Ministry is planning transatlantic substratosphere service for next year with land planes spanning the ocean at a cruising speed of more than 4 miles a minute.

Construction of three 32-ton machines, designed to cruise at 275 miles per hour at 25,000 feet, has started. The passengers—24 on day trips and 12 on night flights—will be sealed in a "pressurized" fuselage and breathe supercharged air.

POTOMAC CHAFF: A Capital man-about-town is showing friends what he claims are four rubber checks he says he won in poker games with members of Congress . . . He says one member lost $3,300 in one game . . . Without the blessing of Jim Farley, a wealthy gentleman from Buffalo named Ed Donovan is boosting the third term idea while Jim is in Europe, with an unlisted private phone in a hotel suite.

Senators Holman & Bilbo . . . great argument

An important middle-of-the-road Democratic leader is telling friends that within the last fortnight President Roosevelt told him at the White House that he is not a candidate for a third term.

Maybe this is another illustration of the hidden ball trick, adapted lately from the gridiron for politics and international affairs.

* * * *

Deception as an element of strategy has been taken over from the football coaches, who saw it first.

If you intend to march into Danzig next week, you say the Danzig problem is in abeyance for several months.

If you're going to vote to delay action on the neutrality bill, you announce that you'll vote to force immediate debate in the Senate.

Don't overlook this in appraising public events today.

"—one pet hate in common"

Foreign agents find it much easier to become chummy with affluent Americans than with the American man in the street.

If necessary, they can deprecate a little apologetically what their governments are doing, in order to get along with the "right people" over here.

Minor differences in ethics disappear before a common hostility to Roosevelt; that can be the beginning of a beautiful friendship over a glass of champagne. It is Nazi strategy to cultivate American millionaires, but they'll find out that only an occasional millionaire is really a pushover for propaganda.

In one indiscreet letter, a Western Congressman misspelled six words—"explane," "gayity," "mediom," "itenirery," "histronic" and "hering" with one "r."

Unfortunately, the letter was addressed to Paul Wing, who conducts spelling bees on the radio, and is something of a spelling expert.

* * * *

This letter only confirmed a suspicion which the spelling expert has long nurtured—that Congressmen as a group are the worst of all spellers. They rely on their secretaries or others to correct their spelling.

Mr. Wing has reached the momentous conclusion that Congressmen are even worse at spelling than newspapermen.

"—end of a civil war"

At a late afternoon gathering a glamorous Washington matron pointed across the room at a distinguished young Spanish diplomat.

"Look at him!" she said. "He looks charming, doesn't he? But I can't see him without thinking of the hundreds of Spaniards now being executed by Franco's orders. We had a civil war once ourselves. But it didn't end with wholesale executions."

"Why is this party laying an egg?" guests asked each other.

It developed that a Senator and one of his severest critics had accidentally been invited to sit at the same table. But the prediction that the Senator might punch his foe in the nose proved baseless.

They were so polite to each other that both of them almost backed into the fountain after dinner.

Several members of Congress have wangled landlords to let them pay rent by the week instead of the month if the session lasts beyond the end of July. . . . The tone of the President's voice when h discussed the Hatch bill at his last press conference gave some of his hearers a hunch that he might be planning to veto it no matter how risky this might be politically. A few observers feel that he has no more to lose by vetoing it than he will lose by signing it.

House to Get Bill Doubling Housing Loans

Rules Committee to Release It Today; Pay Act Parley Called

The House Rules Committee will release their hold today upon one major item of the Administration's preadjournment program, the bill doubling the loan capacity of the United States Housing Authority.

Trapped in the Rules Committee for several days, the measure has been bitterly opposed by the conservative Democrats who dominate the committee. While permitting the housing bill to reach the floor, the group may also decide to throw proposed wage-hour act amendments to the mercy of the House membership.

Rules Committee action on the wage-hour law will, however, at least await the results of an extraordinary conference called for this morning by Chairman Norton of the Labor Committee, in a last forlorn attempt to reach agreement on alterations of the act.

Lewis To Attend

Mrs. Norton, advocate of moderate Administration-approved amendments, has invited to a roundtable meeting John L. Lewis, chairman of the C. I. O.; William Green, president of the A. F. L., and representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers, Railroad labor executives, the Wage-Hour Administration and Department of Agriculture.

The full House Labor Committee will attend the conference, including Representative Barden (Democrat), of North Carolina, author of drastic amendments to the wage-hour law that would exempt many workers engaged in the processing of agricultural products.

Congressional observers frankly expected that no compromise could possibly be reached between the views of Barden and Mrs. Norton. Green has already denounced Barden's proposals, while Mrs. Norton herself has stated that even the amendments she has offered go "too far" in altering the present law.

Conservative Southerners on the Rules Committee said yesterday that as soon as the conference reports that a compromise is impossible, they will move to send the proposed amendments out to the floor of the House.

Cox Accuses "Stalling"

Evidence of the bitter animosity that has torn the Democrats of the Rules Committee apart during consideration of the housing and wage-hour bills came yesterday when Representative Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, accused Chairman Sabath of "stalling."

Angered by the continued delay in voting on the wage-hour amendments, Cox snapped, "You're stalling, Mr. Chairman, you're stalling."

"Well, if I am," retorted Sabath, a strong Administration supporter, "I'm stalling in a good cause."

The 73-year-old chairman added, "I'm getting fed up on some of the remarks you've been making. I've got a better record than you have in reporting legislation to the floor—I've never held up a single bill."

"My record must be a poor one if it's worse than yours," replied Cox, House leader of the anti-New Deal Democrats.

Demanded Party Caucus

It was to combat this group that 51 New Dealers have demanded over opposition of their own leadership, a party caucus which Representative McCormack, of Massachusetts, chairman of the caucus, has scheduled for tomorrow night. Sponsors of the caucus have said they were directing their attack against the "reactionary coalition" of conservative Democrats and Republicans.

They faced a new problem yesterday in the possibility that a majority of the Democratic membership of the House would remain away from the caucus, thereby destroying its effect as a party meeting. If a majority—130 members—attends the caucus and two-thirds of those present take any action, their decision is binding on the whole group except those specifically excused.

At the Rules Committee hearing on the wage-hour amendments, Cox clashed not only with Sabath but also with Representative Welch, of California, a Republican member of the Labor committee who vehemently opposes the Barden bill.

The Barden amendmentts would exempt industrial, not agricultural workers, Welch charged, adding that "I'm not willing for the fair labor standards act to be emasculated."

"Don't you trust members of Congress?" Cox queried.

"I'm willing to trust certain members of Congress," replied Welch.

He declared that "it is well known that the United States Chamber of Commerce has demanded repeal of the fair labor standards act. If you gentlemen think the chamber of commerce, the canning trust and the Southern lumber trust are the vox populi of America, you are living in a fool's paradise."

Aug. 19 Proclaimed National Aviation Day

President Roosevelt yesterday proclaimed August 19 as National Aviation Day, and called for flag displays and appropriate exercises to be held throughout the country on that date.

Authorized recently by Congressional resolution, National Aviation Day will come in a two-month period of celebrations of achievements in aeronautics. The thirtieth anniversary of Army aviation will be held August 2, followed by "National Observance of Air Progress" from September 11 to 24.

Lieut. Clarence V. Conlan (right), commander of a small gunboat which was held four months in the upper Yangtze River, unable to return to its base for supplies, was awarded the Navy Cross for "distinguished service in the line of his profession." Congress voted Admiral Yarnell's award and Acting Secretary of the Navy Edson presented Lieut. Conlan's medal

On Capitol Hill

By the Associated Press.

Ajournment of Congress is more than a week distant, but already some members are leaving the Capital. A few have announced they will be absent on official business. Others, like Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, simply are going home.

Sen. Caraway (Democrat), of Washington, that so many members would leave the city this week-end that it would be impossible to get a quorum.

Senator Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, called "incredible" a rumor reported by Senator Schwellenbach

At least six Senators have departed besides Glass, they are Caraway (Democrat), of Arkansas; Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina; Donahey (Democrat), of Ohio; Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana and Wiley (Republican), of Wisconsin.

Wiley is among the 24 Congressional delegates to the Inter-Parliamentary Union conference at Oslo, Norway.

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee recommended yesterday confirmation of William J. Patterson, of North Dakota, to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Senator Norris (Independent), Nebraska, said he would have to decline "with warmest thanks" an invitation to move to Tennessee at the end of his public career.

"Whatever of my life may remain when I retire," he said, "will be spent among my people of Nebraska who have stuck by me through thick and thin for many years."

A movement to invite the veteran Independent to move to Tennessee, site of the Tennessee Valley Authority, of which he is the legislative "father," has been discussed by Tennesseans.

The difference between a politician and a statesman, as explained by Representative Patrick (Democrat), of Alabama, in house debate on the transportation bill:

"The politician delivers what the statesman promises."

Representative Hallack (Republican), of Indiana, said yesterday that if all the farmers in Indiana sold all their lands and buildings, the receipts would not pay the State's share of the national debt which approximates $40,000,000,000.

Halleck said the per capita debt is $329. Indiana's share is $1,066,698,118, Halleck said, adding that the Census Bureau in 1935 reported the value of farm land and buildings in the State was $1,040,238,000.

Senator Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma, says he got a letter from a constituent saying, "Stop this blankety-blank spending! P. S. Don't cut off any of our projects."

J. L. Fly Slated For McNinch's Post on FCC

Harrison's Former Secretary Now Is General TVA Counsel

James Lawrence Fly, general counsel for the Tennessee Valley Authority and at one time secretary to Senator Harrison, Mississippi Democrat, will be appointed chairman of the Federal Communications Commission to succeed Frank R. McNinch, responsible sources said yesterday.

McNinch intends to resign because of illness. His resignation may be announced within a few days. As a result, Fly's nomination may be sent to the Senate before adjournment—although it is possible that he will receive a recess appointment.

An Administration trouble shooter on several occasions, Fly handled the two cases in which the TVA was upheld by the Supreme Court. He was recently "loaned" by the TVA to the Bonneville Power Administration.

Harvard Law Graduate

He is 41, a native of Texas, was graduated from the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1920, and served three years as a commissioned officer. He resigned to take a law course at Harvard, and received his degree in 1926. He was with the New York law firm of White & Chase for a time. Former President Hoover made him a special assistant to the Attorney General. He handled several important antitrust suits, including the Sugar Institute case in 1932.

Fly was appointed general solicitor of the TVA in 1934 and was made general counsel in January, 1937.

Farley Whips 'Palace Guard' Job Indicates

Kennedy Appointment Viewed as Victory Over Corcoran Clique

By International News Service

Indications Postmaster General Farley has reclaimed his powers over distribution of patronage were seen yesterday when President Roosevelt nominated Harold Maurice Kennedy, Brooklyn lawyer, to be United States attorney for the Eastern District of New York.

Appointment of Kennedy was interpreted in Democratic circles as a signal victory for Farley over Thomas G. Corcoran, leader of the the White House "palace guard," who has struggled for months to line up the appointment for David Schenker, a friend now employed by the investment trust division of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The nomination of Kennedy disposes of one of the choicest plums in the patronage grab-bag. Kennedy, selected over Schenker and John Harlan Amen, special Brooklyn prosecutor, had the indorsement of Frank Kelly, manager of the Roosevelt campaign in Brooklyn in 1932 and 1936. Kelly originally backed Vine Smith, acting United States attorney, but the latter's age, 64, eliminated him.

The appointment was cited by New Dealers and anti-Administration Democrats as one of the "signs" they have been looking for to indicate the outcome of the Roosevelt-Farley "showdown" conference last week-end at Hyde Park.

Though neither the President nor "Genial Jim" would disclose what transpired at the parley, observers were confident the trend of events would give some indication of the new "understanding" between the two leaders in the party. It was no secret in Capitol circles that Farley deeply resented Corcoran's influence in key appointments.

New York, July 26 (AP).—Postmaster General Farley, Europe-bound with several other political bigwigs, shied at third-term talk today out firmly predicted that the 1940 Democratic Presidential nominee—"whoever he is"—would be the successful candidate.

"It is futile for me or anyone else to talk of 1940 until the President has expressed his position," said Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, as he sailed on the U. S. Liner Manhattan.

Sailing with Farley were John D. M. Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, Representative Hamilton Fish, and a delegation of nine Congressmen bound for Oslo, Norway, to attend the inter-parliamentary conference.

Hamilton, whose suite was only three doors away from Farley's quipped about the Democratic leader's comment on prosperity.

"The President isn't sailing, is he" Hamilton asked. "I believe Bruce Barton said that the stock market goes up whenever the President leaves Washington."

Also sailing were Mr. and Mrs. John Roosevelt, son and daughter-in-law of the President. They were seen off by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

House Passes Bill Extending ICC Control Of Water Carriers; Conference Delay Expected

By Robert C. Albright

The House yesterday by a voice vote passed the Administration's transportation bill bringing water carriers for the first time under Interstate Commerce regulation after narrowly defeating a bipartisan drive to exempt the water lines.

By a 167 to 144 teller vote, the House rejected the coastal bloc amendment which would have freed the boat operators from commission control.

An eleventh hour Republican effort to send the entire transportation measure back to committee was overturned by a 273-to-100 record count.

Conference Delay Expected

The bill immediately was sent to the Senate which already has passed a somewhat similar bill, but relatively minor differences were expected to result in a conference delay that may postpone enactment until next session.

With railroads and truck lines already I. C. C.-regulated, both the House and Senate measures by adding water lines bring virtually all forms of transportation except aviation under commission control, with the Civil Aeronautics Authority retaining airline jurisdiction.

Inland waterway and seacoast members who fought for two days against waterway regulation, charging it would operate one-way to railroad advantage, claimed a partial victory in approval of the Wadsworth amendment, which permits each type of carrier to reduce rates, after due allowance for a compensatory return, overhead and service costs. Waterway members said this should permit water lines to maintain a differential between rail and water haulage rates. They had feared an ICC boosting of water rates might transfer water traffic to the rails.

Loans Authorized

As passed by the House, the bill not only co-ordinates transportation regulation, but would permit the roads to initiate consolidation proposals and authorize the ICC to make financing loans to the roads and to purchase or guarantee obligations of the railroads.

It would repeal authority for reduced Government rates over land grant carriers and divide between the Government and the railroads the cost of new bridges replacing those found obstructing navigation.

The Senate bill carries no provision for new RFC loans to the roads, for repeal of land grant Government rates, or for Federal sharing of the cost of bridge replacements over navigable streams.

Taber Defeated

Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, sought to eliminate the proviso for RFC loans, but was defeated, 51 to 49. An effort by Representative Poage (Democrat), of Texas, to continue special Government rates over land-grant roads also failed, 63 to 39.

Administration victory was wrested from defeat on the heart section of the bill—water carrier regulation—when Chairman Lea, of the Interstate Commerce Committee, mustered a bare majority against the South amendment, repealing the water carrier section.

Lea told the House it was the "main feature of the bill" and declared unified control and consolidation were "the very elements of interstate commerce regulation." Approval of the South amendment would have "destroyed" the bill, Lea said.

West Charges Favoritism

Representative West (Democrat), of Texas, charged railroad favoritism, and Representative Dondero (Republican), of Michigan, said the bill conflicted with the Government policy of improving and extending national waterways.

One provision of the bill repeals authority for the Interstate Commerce Commission to take the initiative in drawing and proposing railroad consolidation plans. As passed, the measure leaves carriers of all types free to propose consolidations. But mergers would be permitted only with approval of the commission and under conditions "consistent with the public interest."

Wheeler Bill Reported Out

Railroads would not be permitted to acquire control of competing water carriers.

In another railroad legislation development the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee yesterday favorably reported Chairman Wheeler's resolution directing the ICC to make a study of the feasibility of so-called postalized railroad passenger rates.

Author of the plan, which would reduce transcontinental rates to as low as $12.50, is former State Senator John A. Hastings, of New York.

RFC Earns Surplus Of $251,000,000, Jones Reports

The $10,500,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation has paid all expenses, all interest on borrowed money, and earned a surplus of $251,000,000, Jesse H. Jones, retiring chairman, reported to President Roosevelt and Congress yesterday.

The surplus, Jones declared, will more than cover all losses sustained through loans in the vast operations of the RFC.

Since it was organized in February, 1932, said Jones, who resigned to become Federal Loan administrator in President Roosevelt's reorganization, the RFC has authorized loans of $10,549,471,187.88, but $2,359,394,530.23 was rescinded "because the applicants found they did not need the money or were able to get it from private sources."

Actual disbursements totaled $7,388,986,924.50, of$ $5,661,562.62 has been repaid, leaving an outstanding balance of $1,727,075,361.82.

Md. Farmers Hold Party, Eye Markets

Auctioneer System Seems to Be Unwanted; Can't Understand It

Seaside Park, Md., July 26.—The southern Maryland tobacco farmer, his daughter, wife, grandma and grandpa, totaling some 4,000, came here today and sank their teeth in some 4,000 pieces of fried chicken, agreed 'twas pretty good crop weather and that something ought to be done about this problem of marketing the best tobacco in the world—Maryland's.

A thunder of a situation, that's what it is, this thing of selling tobacco by the sample system in Baltimore (like everybody's grandpa in these parts always did) and this thing of selling in the loose leaf system (something new hereabouts) at Marlboro and Hughesville.

Got to Concentrate

A man's got to decide which is best, has got to concentrate on it like George Sachse, the manager of the Southern Maryland Tobacco Growers Association, told the 4,000 in the big hall, just before that jazz band started and everybody got to kicking up in these new dances and the floorboards shook the problem away.

The farmers were notified the association would open its warehouses in southern Maryland if the open market system should be found to have advantages over present sales methods. But officials were "not yet convinced" of any appreciable difference between the two methods of sale. The board will meet tomorrow in Upper Marlboro for further discussion.

State Senator Lewis Phipps, of Anne Arundel, said that the growers are selling on a monopolistic market and should organize their own monopoly. He shared the view of other speakers—Thomas Parran, of St. Leonards, the association president, and State Senator P. H. Dorsey, of St. Marys—which was to the advantage of the Baltimore market.

Eating Comes First

Anyhow, the eating came before the problem and some of the eating was going on while the problem was being wrestled. Hundreds just sat on the long shady porch, overlooking the blue bay, diving into the fried chickens, the country-cured hams and the crab meat sent over by the two Methodist churches in Friendship, Md. The tall tea glasses kept up a tinkling and the music box in the merry-go-round played mightily.

And all around the farmers talked confidentially and emphatically in small groups under the trees. It was about that marketing business.

Miss Doris Mae McCue, 17, of Bowie, was chosen the tobacco queen of Southern Maryland—but the farmers kept on talking. Somebody asked if any auctioneers were there and the argument started.

Can't Understand Auctioneers

"You know, I just heard one fellow say this morning that's the trouble with the new system, that auctioneering. Works all right down South. But durn it, you can't understand that fellow, all that mumbling, jumbling going on and you don't know what price you've got for tobacco."

The original fried chicken supply and the hams disappeared from the long table. But more farmers came in, laden with baskets with more fried chicken and crab meat, mashed potatoes, slaw and biscuits with sunset tops. That food evaporated. More farmers came on with baskets of chicken. The children stuffed and looked, long-eyed, at the merry-go-round.

Prize Winners Chosen

Prizes were awarded winners in the tobacco growing contest in five southern Maryland counties. Receiving $10 for first place and $5 for second were:

Anne Arundel — Woodrow W. King, Bristol, first, and Richard Ward, Lothian, second.

Calvert—William P. Norfolk, Owings, and C. C. Buckler, Huntington.

Charles—Ernest Keller, Waldorf, and Earl Hamilton, jr., Waldorf.

Prince Georges—Clarence E. Trueman, Brandywine, and C. L. Tucker, Baden.

St. Marys—J. E. Davis, Chaptico; no second prize.

Trueman also won the grand sweepstakes prize of $20.

Then the music started and the farmers went to dancing.

Fried Chicken, New Dances Make Tobacco Farmers Forget Problems

1. TOBACCO QUEEN OF SOUTHERN MARYLAND, that's pretty Doris Mae McCue, 17, of Bowie, chosen yesterday at the Maryland Tobacco Growers Association annual outing in Seaside Park, Md.

3. 4,000 tobacco growers and their families ate some 4,000 portions of Maryland fried chicken, claimed to be the same grade as Maryland-grown tobacco—the very best. The problem of marketing the weed was temporarily forgotten as they settled down to plenty of eating, dancing and swimming

Lauded by Clerics, 'Crusader' Raids Huge Md. Still

Ocean City, Md., July 26 (AP).—Youthful William G. Kerbin, jr., State's attorney for Worcester County, responded to a laudatory resolution from Methodist ministers for his clean-up efforts by raiding one of the largest stills ever found in the county.

The Salisbury district ministerial association voted the resolution and sent a copy to the 28-year-old prosecutor. It congratulated him on the arrest of more than 50 bootleggers, gamblers, persons who disturb the Sabbath, confiscation of stills and slot macthines since January 1.

A few hours after receiving the resolution, Kerbin gathered his raiders—a "flying squad"—and in a bramble thicket near Pocomoke City they found a 300-gallon still. The squad destroyed more than 20 gallons of mash and whisky, but the operator had fled.

Revenue Workers Indorse Custer For A.F.G.E. Head

Internal Revenue Lodge 47, American Federation of Government Employes, has adopted resolutions indorsing Cecil E. Custer for A. F. G. E. president, succeeding Col. Charles I. Stengle, who has declined re-election.

The lodge, largest in the A. F. G. E., will support Charles T. Hoffman for national treasurer, a post now held by Custer, and James G. Yaden for national vice president for the Fourth Civil Service District.

The election of the new president will be held during the organization's eighth annual convention in Atlantic City in September.

Horse Trader, 70, Kills Self After Wife's Rebuke

La Plata, Md., July 26.—A shotgun wound in his head, John B. Bowie, 70, of Ironsides, died here today in Physicians Memorial Hospital. He was found critically wounded yesterday afternoon in the yard of his son's home.

Deputy Sheriff Miller, who investigated, said that the shot apparently was self-inflicted. Preceding the shooting, Bowie quarreled with his wife over a horse trade, the deputy reported. The wife said ten children survive.

Fairfax G. O. P. Supports Howrey

Edward F. Howrey, a resident of Fairfax County for three years, has been selected by the nominating committee of the Fairfax County Republicans as its candidate for Commonwealth's attorney.

He is a graduate of the 1924 class of the University of Iowa, and in 1927 received his degree in law from the George Washington University.

100 Playgrounds Still Are Closed

tion Director Lewis Barrett to be "urgently" needed.

Those on the latter list are Curtis, Smallwood, Ambush, Bryan, Wormley and Bell.

Other grounds mentioned more than once as being urgently needed, but which still are closed, are Blake, Webb, Mann, Oyster, Bunker Hill, Peabody and Cardozo.

Following pleas by Barrett there was an inadequate number of WPA supervisors available, 23 such supervisors were assigned to his office. It was learned yesterday that of these helpers four had been sent to previously padlocked playgrounds, two went to parks where there had been no supervision for younger children, and the remainder were assigned to playgrounds that were already open.

Workers Replaced

The seventeen assigned to playgrounds already in operation, Barrett stated, were to replace other workers who were leaving.

The District Recreation Board sub-committee yesterday ordered Barrett to revise his long-range program. Tomorrow afternoon was tentatively set as the time for his response.

Engineer Commissioner David McCoach gave no indication following a meeting of the sub-committee yesterday whether Barrett's report, which is to include names of candidates and a salary scale for all proposed positions, is likely to be approved at the next conference. District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan joined the sub-committee, which consists of Col. McCoach and C. Melvin Sharpe, members of the Board of Education, at the meeting yesterday.

Meeting Likely Monday

The full recreation board, comprising all three District Commissioners and three Board of Education representatives, is not expected to meet before Monday.

Of the 108 school playgrounds still barred to children, approximately 40 are said by recreation officials to be too cramped or unattractive to draw children from the streets.

The remainder are considered, they say, well adapted to summer recreation programs.

Murder and Rape Up in Summer, FBI Records Show

Seasonal crime trends, based on reports of more than 4,000 law enforcement agencies, show that murder, assault and rape increase during the summer months, while larceny, burglary and robbery occur more frequently in winter, the Federal Bureau of Investigation said yesterday.

FBI officials said the quarterly reports of the bureau have stimulated local law enforcement agencies to improve and modernize their records.

The development of nation-wide crime reporting, worked out in cooperation with the International Association of Chiefs of Police, has been of assistance in raising standards of law enforcement, officials said.

F. R. Moulton Leaving for South America

He Will Sound Out Scientists There on Extending Council

Dr. F. R. Moulton, secretary of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, will leave Washington tomorrow to sound out men of science in Brazil, Argentina and Uruguay on creation of a Latin American affiliate of the association's newly formed "Advisory Council on Human Relations."

The council, which originated with a request from the United States Forestry Service for advice on an educational campaign for forest fire prevention, is now taking shape as an agency available for consultation — in Dr. Moulton's words—on "all the complex human relationships of our modern civilization."

Tremendous Experiment

Seated in his office at the Smithsonian Institution, coat, collar and tie peeled off, the noted mathematician yesterday unfolded the tremendous experiment his colleagues have launched.

Aim of the advisory council, he said, is to bring the experience and methods of science to bear on the vast problems that trouble Americans today.

Dr. Moulton sees the council, or similar bodies, examining the fundamental relationships between employers and labor, doctors and patients, racial and national groups within the United States.

"In case of war, whether America is in it or not, the relationships of the different nationalities to each other and to the whole country would be a matter of the highest importance," he pointed out. "It is the type of question this group might study."

Eight In Council Now

Present membership of the council is eight. Psychology, sociology, economics and anthropology are represented. It has had only one meeting so far, Dr. Moulton explained, and its members are now scattered across the country. He expects them to meet here in the fall to present their report to the Forestry Service.

The council's formation has never been formally announced, but news of the enterprise spread so far that several requests for its services have already been received by Dr. Moulton. "One concerned a problem in international relations," he said.

"We can't enter that field for some time," he remarked, "and you must remember the council is still working on the forest fire problem." The same group of men now forming the council may not be the scientists best fitted to cope with other problems, he said, and additional groups are likely to be set up.

The council's advice will be available without charge to Government agencies and private groups, he stated. Actual expenses of the current work on forest fires are being borne by the forestry service, but costs of the studies "will be worked out with the different groups as each project arises," according to Dr. Moulton.

Burlington County, but no rain fell.

Even Manhattan Island battled the drought. Park lawns were burned to crisp, but the park department concentrated all its men and equipment to save trees and shrubbery. Residents of Staten Island had a taste of dust bowl conditions when hot winds sifted hot dry dust over residential areas.

Hurt in Crash

In Washington, William L. Crane, 53, of 1814 Kenyon street northwest, overcome by heat in Cottage City, Md., suffered a head injury when the Bladensburg ambulance collided with an automobile.

Other heat victims were Dorothy Dacy, 16, of 1425 Wisconsin avenue northwest; Whitfield Holliday, colored, 30, of 1614 Corcoran street northwest, and an unidentified man.

Life Saving Class To Open in Takoma

A course in lifesaving methods will begin at 7 p. m. tonight at the Takoma Park pool under direction of Iverson Hutton, Red Cross instructor, R. H. Duncan, District Red Cross director of first aid and lifesaving, announced yesterday. Classes will be held each Tuesday and Thursday.

It was announced a ten-lesson first aid course for Red Cross instructors will begin Monday at the District Chapter House, 1730 E street northwest. The course will be taught by Dr. John L. Mulherin, first aid and lifesaving representative of the American Red Cross.

12-Ton Van Snapped Telegraph Pole Like Match Stick

Andrew Haas, 31, of Baltimore, Md., was charged with reckless driving by Colmar Manor police yesterday after the 12-ton motor van he was driving ran up on the sidewalk at Cottage City, Md., and demolished the telegraph pole on the corner. The truck barely missed an automobile driven by Mrs. S. K. Molineaux, of Cheverly, Md.

charge off one-half of these loans today."

Taft said there is only "one Jesse Jones among the lenders, but a good many more Wallaces and Carmodys."

In the House, the bill remained motionless in the Banking Committee, where bipartisan opposition theratened to hold up a report until the Senate acts. Controlling right-of-way for the measure to the House floor, conservative Democrats on the Rules Committee privately said they were "in no hurry" to act.

Progress of the bill was further hampered by two unrelated riders, injecting the WPA prevailing wage dispute into already acrimonious debate and promising another Senate vote on restricting Treasury purchase of foreign silver. The proposed WPA prevailing wage rider by the Senate placed another possible barrier in the path of House approval.

Byrd said he would have supported the program were Jones in complete charge but said instead the President will "decide where the money shall go."

"The bill is another blank check," he shouted.

Points to Changed Name

He said that by changing the bill's title from "Self-liquidating" to "Works Financing" the leadership itself was acknowledging the loans would not be fully repaid and declared the national debt already has reached a point where it would take half a billion a year for 56 years to get back to the figure of six years ago.

Senator Townsend, who laid before the Senate his plan to ban foreign silver purchases, said, if approved, it would be the only "sound" feature of the bill.

Townsend criticized specifically the proposed railroad equipment loans, provision for toll highways, and the additional $100,000,000 for the Export-Import Bank to make South American loans.

"The RFC already has all of the funds it needs to aid the railroads and to finance highways," said Townsend. He said Jones had testified to losses the Government already had suffered on "supposedly self-liquidating business loans, and also quoted Jones to the effect that the Export-Import Bank cannot use more than $125,000,000 in financing trade with Latin America and other countries.

"What may we expect other foreign countries to think if we seek to throw credits around in Latin America without first receiving liquidation of old debts?" said the Republican Senator. "How do we contemplate being repaid? In Argentine beef? In silver? In Mexican oil?"

As the debate proceeded into the night, Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, thought "cock-eyed bookkeeping" might result if the principle of the program is extended; Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, called the measure unsurpassed for "hypocrisy"; Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, said superhighways if built paralleling the railroads would throw more rail labor out of jobs, and Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, questioned the need of new rail equipment.

until they encountered and commandeered a private automobile.

The owner of the car, Mrs. Ruby Lee Thurston, 34-year-old teacher of Guinea, Va., was forced to ride in the bus while one of the group followed in the automobile for several miles. She was released unharmed when the other six left the bus and made off in the car. Fifteen prisoners remained in the bus and made no attempt to escape.

Mrs. Thurston reported tonight she was treated kindly by the men while their captive. One gave her a package of cigarettes and another inquired if she was comfortable as she lay on top of four unconscious guards whom she believed dead.

"One of the convicts suggested that they put handcuffs on me, but another one said, 'We're not going to put handcuffs on that lady.' Then they tried to put a shackle on my leg but the shackle was too big."

"The leader told me not to make a move until after they had gone. Before they left, the leader said, I've been pretty fair to you, haven't I?'

"I said, 'Yes, sir.'"

Had an Hour's Start

"'Well, I want you to be comfortable,' he said, and tossed me a package of cigarettes and a box of matches as he ran for my car to make the getaway."

Mrs. Thurston, who wore slacks at the time, said the man didn't bother 75 cents she had in her pocketbook.

The group had about an hour's start before an alarm was broadcast after Chris A. Laurson, officer in charge, called State police and authorities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The guards were beaten when the prisoners attacked them simultaneously while the bus was being driven over the Richmond-Washington highway a few miles south of here. Three of the guards, Clinton E. Campbell, W. E. Godschalk and H. Glenn Cunningham, were treated for superficial injuries at Fredericksburg.

After overpowering the guards, the prisoners donned their gray caps and armed themselves with a blackjack and two revolvers.

At Washington, an official of the Prison Bureau said the prisoners were being transferred as a result of a change in their classification designed to remove them, because they were young men, from the influence of older convicts.

Commandeered Black Auto

Authorities gave the following names for the escapees:

Charles F. Cole, Chattanooga, Tenn., serving a three-year sentence for transporting a stolen car; Gerald Montague, Paducah, Ky., serving a three-year sentence for automobile theft; Luther Morris, of Paducah, Ky., under a five-year sentence for postoffice robbery; John Gibson, of Big Stone Gap, Va., serving a four-year sentence for counterfeiting; Hugh Penny, Big Stone Gap, Va., serving four years for stealing from a railway car; Walter Smith, of Cincinnati, serving three years for breaking into a postoffice, and Raymond Walker, of Columbus, Ohio, serving three and a half years for automobile theft.

ment's bounty while they work hard, often earn less, and get nothing from the Government. There has been considerable complaint that relief families appear to form a special privileged class.

Wallace, however, emphasized that he intended to go slow in extending the food grants to nonrelief families. The plan, he said, will be tried out in Shawnee on an experimental basis for some time before it is extended to other cities.

Shawnee business people, working through the local Chamber of commerce will carry out the plan. The local banks will handle the stamps free of charge.

Eligible With $19-a-Week Income

All nonrelief families in Shawnee whose income does not exceed $19.50 per week will be certified as eligible to obtain stamps.

Blue stamps will be distributed to eligible nonrelief families in amounts equivalent to about 50 cents per person each week.

Those participating in the plan, which goes into effect in about a month, will be required to buy orange stamps in an amount approximating their present food expenditures. Participation will be voluntary.

doctors with loss of standing, forced hospitals to exclude its members and tried to discredit its services. The Department of Justice investigated, presented evidence to an extraordinary grand jury for three months and obtained an indictment last December.

Prominent Men Named

Accused of criminal conspiracy were A. M. A., District Medical Society, Harris County (Tex.) Medical Society and Washington Academy of Surgery. Individuals named as conspirators included some of the most prominent medical men in the country.

Accused officers of A. M. A. were Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association; Dr. Olin West, secretary and general manager; Dr. William Creighton Woodward, director of the Bureau of Legal Medicine and Legislation; Dr. William Dick Cutter, secretary of the Council on Medical Education and Hospitals, and Dr. Roscoe Genung Leland, director of the Bureau of Medical Economics.

Accused officers and former officers of the District Society were:

Dr. Arthur Carlisle Christie, Dr. Coursen Baxter Conklin, Dr. James Bayard Gregg Custis, Dr. Thomas Allen Groover, Dr. Robert Arthur Hooe, Dr. Leon Alphonse Martel, Dr. Thomas Ernest Mattingly, Dr. Francis Xavier McGovern, Dr. Thomas Edwin Neill, Dr. Edward Hiram Reede, Dr. William Mercer Sprigg, Dr. William Joseph Stanton, Dr. John Ogle Warfield, jr., Dr. Prentiss Willson, Dr. Wallace Mason Yater and Dr. Joseph Rogers Young.

Five Restraints Charged

The Government charged them all with conspiring to accomplish five restraints of alleged trade:

GHA's supplying medical care.

GHA members' co-operative provision for medical care.

The GHA staff in their practice of medicine.

Washington hospitals in their business.

The alleged restraints, and the alleged conspiracy to effect it, were claimed to be violations of the Sherman act, which provides $10,000 fines and four months to two years in jail for combinations against the free flow of commerce.

Cleaners Decision Cited

Justice Proctor held that the prosecution could not stand unless medicine were a trade, in the eyes of the law. For guidance on this point, he referred to a recent pronouncement of the Supreme Court, in deciding a case against the Atlantic Cleaners and Dyers, who were accused of operating as a combination in restraint of trade.

The court, Justice Proctor found, reaffirmed the definition of trade uttered by Justice Story 105 years ago. Story said, "whenever any occupation, employment, or business is carried on for the purpose of profit, or gain, or a livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions, it is constantly called a trade."

G. H. A. Ruled Not in Trade

Justice Proctor pointed out that Story expressly exempted the learned professions, "of which medicine admittedly is one."

The G. H. A. members did nothing as individuals, but only through G. H. A., Justice Proctor said, so they could not have been restrained at all. G.H.A. and the hospitals, he found, were not in trade either, and were not protected by the antitrust law.

The court's opinion then discussed the way the indictment was drawn and pointed out that it was "barren of any statement of the business methods used by a single hospital," which "was fatal" to the legality of that part of the indictment, because the defendants were entitled to these facts. "A fundamental requirement," he said, "is that a criminal accusation be stated fully, clearly, and with directness and certainty."

Justice Proctor noted that the indictment, before stating any charges, said the individual doctors would be referred to as "the individual defendants." And nowhere else in the indictment, said the justice, was there any mention of "the individual defendants," which raised a question whether the doctors were accused of any crime. "It does seem," commented Justice Proctor, "that as to such simple, yet all important, matters, an indictment should be drafted so as to exclude any question whatever."

London Bombings Kill 1 and Hurt 22

One previous death occurred in a bombing at Manchester. The terroristic activity began early this year.

Only two days ago Sir Samuel Hoare, Home Secretary, warned Commons the government had "reliable information" that the campaign was being "actively stimulated by foreign organizations."

The second explosion came less than eight hours after the first despite elaborate police precautions.

Three porters and three bystanders were at the checkroom counter. Three of them were treated at the hospital and sent home. The others apparently suffered only from shock.

Women Almost Stripped

Shutters of the room were blown out and debris strewn about. Crowds on the platform fled.

In the first explosion at King's Cross Station, the force of the blast was felt for several hundred yards around. Two women were almost disrobed by the blast.

A number of I. R. A. suspects, both men and women, were questioned, and other placed under surveillance.

A widespread search was begun for a man about 30 years old who was seen to deposit a suitcase at King's Cross Station and hurry away about five minutes before the explosion.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

More Masters of Music Sought for the Cinema

Goldwyn Wants Toscanini and Deems Taylor; Betty Grable Added to Earle's Star Bill; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

THERE WAS A TIME not so long ago when the distinguished stars of the operatic and concert stages and the great orchestral conductors deemed it beneath their dignity to appear in motion pictures—an attitude which seems to be vaguely related to that of the "legitimate" stage stars back in the infant days of the silent cinema, who were accustomed to "sneak off" to the studios and play screen parts under assumed names and heavy disguises.

BELL

This point of view, as goes without saying, no longer prevails in either field of endeavor. A majority of the foremost stars of the traditional theater have attached themselves to the cinema with some permanency and opera stars have been proselyted to the celluloids with such frequency that their shadow appearances are no longer a novelty. That is not quite so true of the world's great conductors, but it seems that it will be soon.

It was considered a bit of daring on his part when Leopold Stokowski agreed to appear both as conductor and actor with Deanna Durbin in "One Hundred Men and a Girl." Perhaps encouraged by his confreres's bravado, Dr. Walter Damrosch has been on the West Coast for some weeks contributing his name and presence to the distinction of Paramount's production of "The Star Maker," in which he appears in persona propria as the director of a large symphony orchestra, and Jascha Heifetz, as everybody must know by now, lends the brilliance of his violin virtuosity to Samuel Goldwyn's new picture, "They Shall Have Music," which only this week had a notable premiere at United Artists' Rivoli Theater in New York.

The engagement of these celebrated artists from the upper strata of rarified art, it appears, is only the beginning. Word comes now by wire from Hollywood of an announcement by James Roosevelt, vice president of United Artists, that negotiations are under way to bring Arturo Toscanini, renowned master of the baton, and Deems Taylor, noted American composer, to the film capital for important parts in a new motion picture also to be dedicated to music.

The new production is tentatively titled "The Great Music Festival" and is not scheduled for active work before next summer. In this lapse of time, anything can happen—but probably nothing will to impede the progress and successful culmination of Mr. Goldwyn's elaborate plans.

It was not like that in "the good old days." Or were they?

Deems Taylor, by the way, possesses talents that extend beyond the matter of musical composition. He also composes fluent and expressive prose in a style that is as dignified as it is entertaining and clear. This is brought to my attention by a brochure, just to hand, in which Mr. Taylor writes an appreciation of Jascha Heifetz, star of Mr. Goldwyn's "They Shall Have Music," whose role expanded as the picture progressed in work. The booklet, bearing the title only of "Jascha Heifetz," would be a valuable addition to any library, brief as it is.

Getting a little closer to home, it develops that the week of Friday, August 4, will mark a triple-star event, insofar as the stage proceedings are concerned. It already has been announced here that Eddie "Rochester" Anderson will be present, in person, to lend comedy to the bill. Further announcement comes from Zone Manager John J. Payette, of the Warner interests, that Betty Grable, also featured in the cast of "Man About Town," starring Jack Benny, likewise will be on the same program. As if that were not enough, Frankie Masters and his Bell-Tone Rhythm Orchestra have been articled to complete the three-star roster. This is a stage bill that will be seen in only three cities outside of Washington.

The 16 Earle Roxyettes, while we are on the subject, have risked their arms, their legs and their necks in hazardous routines on stilts, ladders, roller skates, ice skates, ladders, walking-balls and whatnot without disastrous result to any member of the ensemble. Now Production Manager Harry Anger is going to see if he can dislocate a hip or two among the gals. Beginning Friday, he is staging a "Hula-Hula" number in which his undulating charges will toss their torsos about in true Polynesian fashion.

Lloyd Nolan will be conspicuously in evidence on local screens come Friday. He is cast in one of the pivotal roles with Akim Tamiroff and Patricia Morison in "The Magnificent Fraud," next attraction at the Earle, as well as in "Undercover Doctor," scheduled for the Columbia. "Undercover Doctor," incidentally, is based on an incident in J. Edgar Hoover's book, "Persons in Hiding." Mr. Nolan it was, you will recall, who supplanted George Raft when Mr. Raft objected to his screen assignments. Neither one seems to have suffered any.

The Retail Theater, a new amateur group, will make its bow to Washington tonight and tomorrow night, at Roosevelt Auditorium at 8:30, in their first production. For this initial effort, the Retailers have chosen a pretty stiff number. The play will be Emlyn Williams' eerie drama, "Night Must Fall," produced successfully on the professional stage in both London and New York and later made into his best picture by Robert Montgomery. The leading roles will be played by John Allen, as Dan; Olivia Grayne, as Mildred Hope, and Margaret Schutz, as Mrs. Bramson.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, July 26 (INS).—Looking surprisingly young and appealing as ever, Lillian Gish arrived in our town today to talk movie contract. She moved into the guest house at Pickfair, but before she had time to unpack, Gene Towne and Graham Baker had sent her a script of "Swiss Family Robinson" which they want to make with Lillian playing the mother and Herbert Marshall the father. There was also word for her to be ready to make a test for Mary Todd in "Abe Lincoln in Illinois." So unless something very unexpected happens, we will be seeing La Gish in the movies again.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Interesting that so many of the old-timers are coming back—D. W. Griffith at Hal Roaches, Mack Sennett with Darryl Zanuck, Leatrice Joy and now the Gish. Lillian brought with her the story of her life, which she wrote at Taos, N. Mex., in collaboration with Myron Brinig. When I tell you that several producers are interested in putting it one the screen, you will agree with me that the fair-haired Lillian is really back in the Hollywood limelight.

The T. C. F. gang feel they've got something in Linda Darnell, the little girl who was so young when she first started in pictures that they sent her home to grow up. She makes her debut in Elsa Maxwell's "Hotel for Women," the Cosmopolitan picture being previewed tomorrow night, and after that diploma she gets a break that every budding actress would adore. That is the lead in Tyrone Power's next picture, "Johnny Apollo," starting September 4, with Irving Cummings directing. Ty will have Edward Arnold as his father, a stock manipulator who goes to jail. Sounds a little Richard Whitneyish but isn't, because the son (Ty) is the hero.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Wonder if it's true, as I heard at a party the other eve, that the Freddie Marches will welcome the stork. Would be grand news, for both Florence and Freddie love children and make fine parents for their adopted Penny and Tony; Jean Feldman, who was in a New York hospital for a minor ailment, flew back home today; Venita Varden says she and Jack were never happier and if that is the case I am glad to print it; Bob Leonard, who has lost 40 pounds and hopes everyone will notice it, took lessons at Bob Murphy's Cafe from the greatest cardtrick specialist I have ever seen. This magician performs tricks so breathtaking we all lingered on for hours watching him; Marie Wilson, one of my sleuths writes, is a sensation in New York, which ought to help the revival of Anita Loos' play, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

Sally Eilers long-distanced Harry Joe Brown that "The College Widow" opened to the largest crowd that has ever attended the Mohawk festival. One of Sally's admirers wired us that she received a real ovation; Patricia Ellis and Felix du Pont, of Argentina, a devoted Victor Hugo twosome; Peter Lorre, who has been so very ill, is back in town and we, with his other friends, hope that he will soon be well enough to make a picture; Dmitri Tiomkin's admirers, among them many film celebs, have reservations for the Hollywood Bowl Friday night to hear him play.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Roadside

Figuring the 1920's as dead as the 1870's, the Roadside Theater has flipped back to only yesterday and resurrected "Spooks," a piece of shattering shrieks, mercurial disappearances and a lot of cold, clammy fun.

This week's 1921 melodrama presents one of those eccentric wills, whereby all concerned may inherit a pack of money, if they stay in the spooky old house three nights running. Before three midnight bats have circled the stage, there are two pieces of flesh awaiting the ice box. Every one is under suspicion and if you think you're going to get any more about it from us, in the words of Elinor Glyn, you have a screw loose.

Lansing Hall's screams are undoubtedly the sharpest this side of the eighth circle and the entire cast is as impeccable as Dante's Beatrice. Anne Ives says not a word, but ugh! George Farrington, as a frightened colored man, had last night's audience knocking knees and Larry Lawrence is as courageous a stutterer as ever stuttered. Catherine Knockey, Maccubbin Waters, Florence Konold, Ted Projector, Sherman Lee, Rhodes K. Scherer and James Crawford completed the well-applauded cast.

Russian Film Has Premiere At the Little

"Alexander Nevsky" Dips Back Into The Middle Ages

A world we never knew springs to life in "Alexander Nevsky," the Little Theater's first-run, Soviet film from Director Sergei Eisenstein.

This crude, medieval setting of Russia is something to see. Because most of us are so unacquainted with the details of such early Russian history as even to care about a northern leader of the thirteenth century, "Alexander Nevsky" may seem strange and unpleasant, but its rough force in telling, as well as in setting, make it strangely memorable.

Alexander Nevsky leads his homeloving people against a far greater enemy than the marauding Mongols. A more terrible enemy to the west was feared by the people of Novgorod and it was only to lead his people against the dreaded Germans that Nevsky finally consented to leave his peaceful fishing village. A magnificent fight, by the side of a frozen lake, is the central point of the drama. The Teuton phalanx, ultimate fighting weapon of the thirteenth century, is pictured in telling detail and the warlike triumphs of those little-known days make a splendid historical panorama.

Story Is Simply Told

There is no denying the technical weaknesses of the Soviet studios. Lighting and sound recording are far below those in our everyday features, but in place of these advantages there is a tremendous vitality and imagination. The simple story is told in but bare outline, with bold strokes, and the great Sergei Eisenstein, who directed "Potemkin" and "Ten Days That Shook the World," is again revealed as a masterly director.

There is a sweeping score by Sergei Prokofieff, the great composer, who has been heard in the concert halls of this country. In the leading role is Nikolai Cherkassov, honored artist of the republics, whose portrayal is a masterpiece of heroic acting. A magnificnt looking man, he making the legendary hero a vibrant figure.

Makes Jargon Seem Like French

Another headache for students of French is foretold in the casting of Charles Judels as a French pharmacist in "Lady of the Tropics." Judels, who even baffled fluent French speaker Hedy Lamarr with his jargon on the set, actually doesn't speak a word of the foreign tongue. But he is so expert in mimicking the sound of French words that he can even convince a Parisian that he is listening to his native language, though he'll have no idea what is being said.

Honors Jo Ann

Picked as one of the most promising of young Hollywood actresses, Jo Ann Sayers will be made honorary colonel of the Hollywood American Legion.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., July 26.—I'm sick of hearing that Garbo is amazing her fellow workers by actually laughing with them. I'm here to tell you she always did. She can hold her own as a story-teller, too. How do I know? Played with her in "As You Desire Me." If the ones who chitchat about her would follow her example, they'd be better off. For each scene she gives her best. Even when she knows it's bad and will be written out. I asked her why she did that. She replied: "I don't know any other way."

HOPPER

She entertained the Rumanian Minister to Japan the other day on the set. When she heard her cameraman, Bill Daniel's father, was so ill she sent him home at once. His father passed away the next day.

She nearly got socked in the eye yesterday by the same Mr. Daniels. Seems he's very ticklish and she'd seen other members of the company go up and tickle him in the ribs. So, thinking she'd have a little fun, too, she did it. He swung on her before he realized who'd done it.

Wait 'till you see her fanny-fall during a drunken scene, which will do much to endear her to American audiences. I'm wondering if her foreign followers won't think it's a little undignified. Lubitsch is working her so fast she called out to him: "What next, Mr. Van Dyke?"

Flora Robson, who's thinning, had a fit on the set of "We're Not Alone" when she discovered capsules she was taking in the picture were filled with sugar.

That Ilona Massey girl is doing a swell job in "Balalaika." The crew and workers rave about her. It's their judgment I go for.

I watched Nelson Eddy being pushed in gold costume on "Balalaika" set. A bit player was likewise being girdled. "Look," said Nelson, "you've got two gold stars on you, epaulets."

"Well," said the man, "I'm a captain." Then he spied a medal on Nelson's pocket. "What did you get that for?"

"For dancing," said Nelson, as he warbled into his song.

Greg Ratoff has an aunt who is a rabid fan—knows all about stars, writers and directors' private lives. Greg, writing her about a new restaurant, went into raves, ended with "ate with gusto." "Who is Gusto?" wrote Auntie?

Overheard in the Metro cafe: "He has an executive stomach on a publicity man's diet."

Last year producers appropriated nearly $1,000,000 for campaign: Motion Pictures Are Your Best Entertainment. So far, to celebrate pictures' Golden Jubilee, they've collected $1,000.

The Post's New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, July 27.

THE FEDERAL courthouse here soon may furnish an unprecedented scene—that of a man who is likely to receive the Republican Presidential nomination being examined on the witness stand by a man who once was the Democratic Presidential candidate. For District Attorney Tom Dewey may be the "surprise witness" in the current disbarment proceedings against Louis Levy and Paul Hahn—proceedings which are an outgrowth of the Judge Manton case . . . If Dewey, who originated the Manton investigation, should be called, he will be examined by John W. Davis.

SEYMOUR KLEIN, who prosecuted and convicted Johnny Torrio, is expected to resign from the United Stated Attorney's staff shortly, to become a private practitioner . . . Lou Clayton, Jimmy Durante's manager, emerged from his sixth trip to the hospital—a respite until October when he'll return for additional treatments. All this is an aftermath of his nose-beautifying operation . . . Dashiell Hammett, author and originator of "The Thin Man" series, has notified M-G-M that there won't be another Thin-Man story this year, because of his new newspaper job . . . Woollcott now isn't so sure whether he'll appear in the play Kaufman and Hart are writing for him.

LOU HOLTZ reminisced about Feodor Chaliapin the other night, and revealed that the famed singer loved to attend burlesque shows . . . Chaliapin once went to Minsky's, where a strip-teaser sang a chorus of "Margie" and then invited the audience to sing with her . . . "Mahhhhjeeeeee," Chaliapin's voice boomed in the accompaniment to the $40-a-week entertainer. A patron seated in front of the Metropolitan Opera star turned around, pointed to the strip-teaser and shouted: "Keep your mouth shut, mister. We paid to see HER."

ANOTHER favorite of Chaliapin's was Al Jolson, who as yet hadn't signed any film contracts. Joe Young, the songwriter who wrote "Mammy," went backstage at the Met and told Chaliapin: "I've got to rush away. I'm going to see Eddie Cantor. He's playing in the theater around the corner." . . . "Don't see Cantor," the singer advised. "Go to see Jolson" . . . "But Jolson is in Los Angeles now," Young informed . . . "Go," said Chaliapin, "see Jolson."

COLUMBIA Films' three stooges were signed the other night to appear in George White's new Scandals . . . Eddie Duchin is within $100 of breaking the record at the Strand Theater . . . Longo, who spent nine months in a Jersey City jail after opposing Mayor Hague in a Democratic primary fight, is planning a surprise for Hague—by having himself appointed an assistant superintendent of elections in Hudson County . . . George Marshall, owner of the Washington Redskins, has hired Hal Kemp's band to make a private recording of "Hail to the Redskins," which his wife, Corrine Griffith, wrote.

THE RKO Studios have dispatched alarms, via the Hollywood columns, for Ginger Rogers, who left the film colony for a quiet vacation . . . Miss Roges failed to notify her studio with regard to her plans, and left no forwarding address . . . If RKO still is anxious to reach Ginger, she's now at the Royal Hawaiian, in Honolulu . . . Ginger, who still is the wife of Lew Ayers, registered at that hotel under her real name—"Virginia Ayers."

COMMISSIONER OF INC. Bill Herlands is ready to be called as a rebuttal witness in the bribery trial of Assistant District Attorney Alexander Baldwin . . . Vincent Lopez will feature a new tune, "Sub-Deb Blues," written by Sally Sears, the Boston sub-deb, and George MacKinnon, the columnist. Its lament is "It's so weird and lonesome up here on Beacon Hill" and concludes with "A sub-deb is the lonesomest girl in the world" . . . Leon & Eddie's, whose walls are adorned with the most risque cartoons in town, tried to get Coca-Cola to pay display-rates for its sexy "Pause That Refreshes" illustration. Coca-Cola refused—explaining that it would be undignified. Philip Morris, however, is interested in sponsoring the "artistic" call-for-Philip-Morris cartoon.

GLORM SWANSON brought her 14-year-old son to the Rainbow room the other night, and urged him to accept the challenge to play against Ruth Aarons, the table-tennis champion who is appearing there . . . "Go ahead and play," Miss Swanson prodded the boy. "It's good for you" . . . The youngster consented, and played so well that he was presented with a prize—a magnum of champagne . . . "For that, you may have an orangeade," his mother congratulated. "It's good for you" . . . "What about the champagne?" the boy asked . . . "That," she assured him, "is good for me."

Station PDS Presents Guest Accordionist

LAWRENCE W. FREUDE, 1919 H street northwest, of the Labor Department, will be heard on this morning's PDS program over station WMAL. Mr. Freude has appeared in night clubs and on the radio. His main ambition is to write a "hit" tune

"Station PDS Presents," broadcast by Lee Everett from the Peoples Drug Store Studios, Eleventh and G streets northwest, is presented each weekday morning from 7:30 to 8:30 by Peoples Drug Stores in co-operation with The Washington Post. Anyone over 18 years old may participate in the auditions at 7:30 p. m. Tuesdays at the N. B. C. studios. Performers are paid $5 for their appearance on this prokram.

'Golden Circlers' Get Strong Roles

Susan Hayward and Joseph Allen, members of Paramount's "Golden Circle" of new players, recently began work in support of Bob Burns in "Our Leading Citizen."

Marking fulfillment of Paramount's promise to all members of the "Golden Circle" to place them in strong roles with top stars immediately, Hayward and Allen each will receive the best opportunities of their respective careers in "Our Leading Citizen."

Director Al Santell expressed the belief that this "Golden Circle" duo will take a long step toward immediate stardom in this picture.

Slightly Ironic

Official Washington is habitually considerate of the rights of citizenship in suburban towns adjacent to the District. In 1912 it appeared that some of these communities just across the line in Maryland and Virginia were irritated by the rule forbidding civil service employes to take an active part in political campaigns. The rule was modified so that Cottage City, Falls Church and similar self-governing suburbs could elect Federal employes to local offices if they so desired.

Now Senator Hatch is ready to insert an amendment in his bill on "pernicious political activities" so as to preserve this sensible rule. In amending the bill the House neglected to include the exemption which Government workers holding offices in nearby communities have long enjoyed. It is characteristically decent of Senator Hatch to press for a correction of the measure so that Washington's satellite towns will not be disturbed in their exercise of the right of home rule.

The irony of the situation comes to light only when the happy lot of those communities is contrasted with that of the Capital itself. In Washington it is not only Government employes who are denied the right to hold office by election of their fellow citizens. That denial extends to all residents of the District. Indeed, Congress has not yet seen fit to let the District have a full-fledged local government even under control of appointed officials.

By all means Congress should act to save the self-governing suburbs from the inconvenience of choosing new officials. In taking that action, however, it is difficult to see how the legislators can avoid reflecting on their long neglect of the infinitely greater problem of local government in the District.

In The Building Trades

If mass organization could be counted upon to advance mass-production methods in the building industry, there would be every reason to applaud the C. I. O. decision to form a "powerful industrial union" in this field. The failure to realize the economies of standardization and concentration in building is cited by many critics as explanation of the continued slump in this basic industry.

And it may be that John L. Lewis will concentrate on this desirable development in his latest bid to extend C. I. O. power. The objectives of the newly created organization committee are in certain respects admirable. Undoubtedly there is a crying need of stabilization through elimination of unauthorized strikes, jurisdictional disputes and lockouts. The craft unions with their jealousies, and their short-sighted refusal to work for lower building costs, are a fair target for attack from without. A well-disciplined union of the industrial type, willing to adjust its demands to what the industry can afford to pay, might well be a boon, both to construction workers of all classes and to the general public.

Unfortunately, there is some doubt as to whether the Lewis aim of increased wages and improved conditions is wholly calculated to stabilize the industry and improve the lot of all construction workers. If the C. I. O.'s objective of higher wages means increases in already excessively high hourly rates paid to some skilled craftsmen, little is to be gained from its entry on the scene. If, on the other hand, the demand for better wages implies acceptance of wage rates calculated to keep construction costs at reasonable levels, thus stimulating employment and increasing annual earnings, the C. I. O. intervention may do great good.

But, regardless of the intentions of the C. I. O., its appearance in the construction field will all too probably be a signal to the A. F. of L. to gird for battle. And the result of that is almost certain to be a multiplication of inter-union struggle, leading to all sorts of costly and vexatious stoppages of work. The signs, indeed, point to a major clash of a peculiarly bitter type, because in the present instance the C. I. O. is planning to capture a stronghold of the A. F. of L. Heretofore, its chief efforts have been confined to the largely unorganized mass industries.

As much as an improvement in the building industry it is reasonable to anticipate another illustration of the suicidal consequences which are all too probable when headstrong labor leaders divide their forces and dissipate in antagonism the strength that should be directed toward general social betterment.

Inept Defense

Senator Barkley's characterization of the Administration's spending-lending bill as a plan for solving the problem of unemployment is singularly inept. For, in opening the debate on the bill, he himself stressed the failure of previous New Deal efforts to spend our way back to prosperity. He admitted that "in spite of the vast sums expended by the Public Works Administration, added to the amount spent by the Works Progress Administration, we have not been able to absorb the unemployment which has faced our country for nearly a decade."

Confronted by this record of futility it would seem only logical to turn from pump priming to some more promising method of dealing with the unemployment problem. Senator Barkley, however, has nothing better to offer than more spending, entailing further increases in the Federal debt. The majority leader is evidently aware of the weakness of this position, for he admits that critics blame Government policies for the unwillingness of private capital to enter the construction field. Moreover, he anticipated, without refuting, the arguments of those who attribute business hesitancy to the staggering debt burden.

Mr. Barkley also regrets "the necessity for the increase of our public debt." But he proceeds to urge that increase without attempting to prove wherein the necessity lies. Instead he trots out the specious argument that the debts of the American people in the aggregate—public and private—are not large enough to give alarm. Intent on minimizing the burden of the public debt, he points out that while this was declining during the twenties, private indebtedness was rapidly increasing.

This effort to link the growth of debt with the prosperity of the twenties sadly miscarried, as Senator Adams quickly noted that the great increase in private and corporate debt prior to 1929 was probably chiefly responsible for the severity of the subsequent depression. Other critics pointed out that the burdensomeness of a debt depends not upon mere size but upon the method of utilization of the proceeds. Debts offset by earning assets—whether public or private—belong in a very different category from debts that represent irrecoverable expenditures.

It is significant that the debate so far has revolved chiefly about the question of the cost of the new spending program, indicating that the Senate is properly worried over the fiscal position of the Government. Such preoccupation with the financial aspect of the program is a tacit confession of loss of faith in spending as a cure for unemployment and a stimulant to business. Senators who still believed in pump priming as a remedy for our economic ills would not have fallen upon the Administration's bill with pruning shears. Indeed there was a time when this Administration was itself keen to restrain the spending zeal of Congress.

Unquestionably the old belief in the miracle-working powers of Government spending to increase national income, and automatically bring the budget into balance, has vanished. Otherwise there would be no point in the importance attached to the alleged self-liquidating character of the new lending program by its advocates.

The half-apologetic, half-defensive tone of Senator Barkley's leadership is itself a strong argument against this Administration measure. Lacking convincing reasons for its acceptance, conscientious legislators can hardly fail to regard this latest attempt to solve the unemployment problem as a dangerous as well as a futile expedient. The sane conclusion is that the bill should be rejected in its entirety.

Cellar Club Amusement

About a year ago social workers in New York were much perturbed by the existence in the slum areas of the lower East Side of 5,000 or more "cellar clubs" meeting in dingy, ill-ventilated basement rooms. In these "clubhouses" boys and girls gathered for dancing, cards and possibly drinking. This none-too-favorable environment, and the fact that the gatherings were unsupervised, led many to assume these clubs to be incubators of immorality and possibly of crime.

That view is not wholly sustained by the study of 28 presumably representative "cellar clubs" just completed by the celebrated Henry Street Settlement. The investigators found that while the rendezvous were not the most wholesome of places neither were they the schools of sin they had been represented to be. In fact, it was found that, as a means of protecting themselves against police interference, a large number of the clubs had banded themselves into a federation and had adopted an ethical code which prohibits, among other things, profanity, lewdness, immoderate drinking and even "loud, boisterous noise."

From these facts a few conclusions seem fairly obvious. The first is that for youth recreation is as much a necessity as food or rest, and that necessity is sharpened rather than diminished by poverty, poor housing and uninteresting labor. Another is that, if these "cellar clubs" have not developed anti-social tendencies, it is due to the good sense of their young members and not at all to the city government.

New York's "cellar clubs" undoubtedly signify a deficiency in the recreation system of that city. The lack of wholesome play facilities under supervision of expert directors has given rise to organizations which have no community spirit or civic responsibility but are interested solely in amusement of their own members.

This experience of New York gives special point to the recreation program that is now taking shape in Washington. Thanks to the persistent efforts of civic-minded citizens, our recreation system is now partly consolidated. Playgrounds long padlocked are being opened to Washington children and a more far-reaching program of leisure-time activities is promised. It is impossible to calculate the value of this undertaking in any definite terms. But everyone who has given thought to the problem realizes that the direction of youthful energy into constructive channels is one of the truly valuable services that every community can and should provide.

Boomerang Indictment

The Government's indictment of the American Medical Association and ancillary bodies has been turned into an indictment of the Department of Justice. Seldom has that law-enforcement agency suffered a sharper rebuke than that administered by Justice Proctor in District Court yesterday.

The rebuke is not softened by the general restraint of the court's comment on a silly suit, which Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold was most ill-advised to initiate. Now, in the face of Justice Proctor's lucid and closely reasoned opinion, the Department of Justice is in an unenviable quandary. It must either admit that its indictment of the American Medical Association as a combination in restraint of trade was a blunder, or it must take an appeal from a judgement which seems to leave very few footholds for effective criticism.

Such an appeal, if lost, would only further humiliate the Administration and, win or lose, it would continue to exacerbate an issue which can only be solved by friendly co-operation. The A. M. A. and many of its subordinate bodies are now showing an unmistakable tendency to further, rather than impede, well-managed group health projects. The Department of Justice will turn bad into worse if it stubbornly insists on pressing an indictment bound to arouse the strongest professional antagonism.

That indictment was characterized by Justice Proctor yesterday as a "highly colored, argumentative discourse." It was found by him to indulge freely in "inference, opinion and conjecture." The justice regarded it as "afflicted with vague and uncertain statements." The indictment, finally, was found lacking in "the fundamental requirement that a criminal accusation be stated fully, clearly and with directness and certainty."

These are biting criticisms of the Government's case, entirely aside from the common-sense opinion, amply backed by legal precedent, that the practice of medicine can not properly be defined as a "trade" in the sense intended by the anti-trust laws. And while the criticisms are important for the case in point they are even more so as a demonstration of one of the cardinal and most vital principles of this democracy—the subordination of the Government, just as much as that of the individual citizen, to the even-handed processes of law.

Justice Proctor's opinion yesterday will not be assessed at its true value unless its criticism of an obviously punitive action against the medical profession is emphasized. Unquestionably members of that profession have their shortcomings. Undoubtedly the attitude of some of them toward group health movements has been reactionary and socially injurious. But those mistakes are no excuse for an arbitrary attempt to dragoon organized medicine into lowering its cherished standards. To dictate in that manner, as Justice Proctor has ably indicated, the Government must have a far better case than it was able to present.

Chairs Of Destiny

Howard Vincent O'Brien in the Chicago Daily News.

A whole book could be written about the influence of chairs on human history. One who travels from France to England—only an hour or so across a narrow strip of water—will be struck by the sudden difference in chairs. The French chair is straight-backed and hard. The English is deeply upholstered.

An old Frenchwoman explained to me that the difference in chairs was not merely a reflection of differences in character, but the cause of it. "The French," she said, "are an alert and imaginative people because their stiff and uncomfortable chairs are a stimulus to the mind. The English are what they are because their chairs make them fall asleep."

Children's Play

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What is safety for children? The streets of Washington, D. C. are just as safe a place for children to play as the playgrounds the way they are operated. Is this condition safe and sanitary? Why not give the children a safe, clean place to play and require the dogs and cats to be kept off the playgrounds?

For the dog lovers provide a dog yard. I suggest one dog yard in the Northwest, one Northeast, one Southeast and one Southwest. Fence it in for the dogs to play, apart and separate from the children. Give the children a chance to sit on clean lawns or play on the playground in safety. These dog yards would not cost the city as much as the present reconditioning of parks damaged by dogs and the streets would be safe from biting dogs and dogs roving under automobiles. People who want to keep their property clean and beautiful would not have everybody's dog filth to clean or their flowers ruined by dogs using them or wallowing them out.

I again suggest we provide outdoor skating rinks for children and bicycle tracks with seats nearby for mothers. Plant shade trees and build the cellar door type of slides. Why not have croquet sets? We are not providing the kind of play children want. Keep the skating rinks open to children until 9 o'clock at night. The children want to skate and ride bicycles and tricycles and they should be provided a safe place to skate and to ride.

I hope the playground instructors will announce every day to the children to remember that the playground is for play and the school lawns are not to play or to run over. Ask them to help keep our school lawns beautiful and clean.

Interesting Account

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Just a belated letter to thank you for the interesting account of Their Majesties, King George and Queen Elizabeth, in Mr. Harlan Miller's column of June 16.

It was refreshing to read an unbiased account of these "humans" who carried themselves with grace and dignity.

I have lived in London, England, most of my life, until the force of circumstances brought me to America, and I know whereof I speak when I have nothing but praise to give to life under a monarchy.

"Lap Me In Soft Lydian Airs"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Sympathy is born of understanding; therefore it is easy to understand the lack of sympathy expressed by The Post in its editorial, "Timid Tenor." The views expressed prove that the writer of the editorial has never lifted his voice in song. Of course any monotone could sing "The Star-Spangled Banner" and not be conscious of the high or low notes. It is my conclusion that the writer is either a monotone or that he never sings.

Having heard school children squeak on the high notes and whisper on the low notes of our anthem and realizing that these young voices should never be forced to reach high notes, we sympathize with Mr. Jagel's understanding, thorough study, and wish to tell you, Mr. Editor, that you are talking about something with which you are unfamiliar.

Not only tenors but sopranos, altos and basses resent the range of notes in our anthem. One of our best composers has written a more suitable national anthem wishing to give us a song we would enjoy singing—one which would stand on its own merit.

We learn the words of the songs we love! We who sing have always objected to the range of notes in "The Star-Spangled Banner." And maybe you, Mr. Editor, are acquainted with the pitiful attempts of those who don't sing to reach these notes.

When a trained singer objects to the range of a song, a specialist has spoken. And if trained singers find a range difficult, naturally the range would be impossible for untrained voices. Since the national anthem is a song mostly sung by groups the range of notes should be easy for the average voice. Mr. Jagel's claims are well founded. And I would suggest, Mr. Editor, that you find a copy of "The Star-Spangled Banner" and try to sing it.

JEAN DUNN FREEMAN.
Falls Church, Va., July 24.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I comment on your editorial, in The Post of July 22, on Fredrick Jagel, who publicly has objected to our national anthem?

To the professional singer who is asked frequently to sing "The Star-Spangled Banner," that piece of music must indeed be a pain in the neck, if I may be permitted to localize the difficulty. While it is a melody that a five-bottle Hogarthian quartette might negotiate with ease—the bassos doing the low parts and the tenors doing the high (the whole being transposed into a low key)—and which school children manage to squeak through, en masse, in pretty much the same way, it is no easy chore for a professional singer to perform, often at the end of a difficult concert program or even under the most favorable circumstances.

For, while no one but the Hogarthian quartet is supposed to admire the performance of the Hogarthian quartet nor any but the school children even hear their rendition, Fredrick Jagel is supposed to make this anthem sound impressive to a listening throng. At least, he is expected to hit all of the notes. The same goes for John Charles Thomas, Nelson Eddy and a score of others, all of whom no doubt have expressed the opinion that Mr. Jagel has made public.

The job of a tenor, incidentally, is to make music—to sing artistically—and the vocal calisthentics mentioned in the editorial are welcomed only by coloraturas. In an opera, high notes are rather the exception, and when one does occur in an aria, it is for a brief, dramatic measure. Never does half the music lurk around B flat, as in "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Mr. Jagel contends that the words of "The Star-Spangled Banner" are unpoetic. Your editorial says, in effect: What of it? No one knows them, anyhow. If that is so, it may be because they obviously are not worth learning or because, on account of the difficulty of the music, the national anthem seldom is sung. Everyone knows the words of the simple and dignified "America," which I think may be considered, unofficially, our national anthem, although "The Star-Spangled Banner" holds that honor by virtue of an act of Congress.

OSMAND SHREVE MOLARSKY.
Washington, July 22.

Alien Rights

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Even the best of the "100 per cent American" may not be either wisest nor the best informed person on earth. The secretary of Men's Trade Union League (like the majority of American citizens, native or foreign born) should remember that reverence toward Christian religion, and respect for international law are principles of greater importance than the mere idea of citizenship to any country.

Speaking therefore from these two great platforms—Christianity and international law—are we so sure that even the framers of the U. S. Constitution did not err when they substituted "belief in the Constitution" for an earlier "belief in the Christian religion," as a condition of citizenship? If they were wise or right, then the religionists who criticize Fascist, Nazi and Communist systems are inconsistent.

If however, it be argued that political liberty, as inferred by the language of the Constitution, is the highest ideal, then those who condemn "aliens" indiscriminately because they would rather remain champions of (what is to them) the higher standard—Christianity—do not realize that they are unwittingly persecuting the innocent, and sometimes the best type of residents in the land, even though no one has pleaded for their cause.

To say that "aliens," even if they have been law-abiding, should be fingerprinted because the President is fingerprinted, shows woeful lack of understanding of the situation. In the case of the President, as of any other prominent American, it is one more form of free publicity, while in the case of the "alien" (who perhaps has a right to complain for having been refused naturalization papers without good cause) it means ostracism in his community, seeing that even his best friends may wonder why he has to go to police station at specified periods to report! The claim that all foreigners in other countries register in this manner is not true.

Only on arrival do visitors or travelers report or register in their own hotels, but never after they have become regular residents. On the other hand, the criminal or the suspect should be required to be fingerprinted and report regularly, be he American citizen or not; that would be according to law and justice. NONRESIDENT.
Washington, July 21.

Spanish Refugees

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am moved publicly to express my approval of the Spanish Refugee Relief Campaign which has just sent me a letter appealing for funds for the 400,000 refugees in the French camps. The letter is signed by Bishop Francis J. McConnell, an acknowledged authority on social and economic problems. The honorary chairman of the campaign is Hon. Harold L. Ickes.

Two things the campaign claims can be done for these refugees. I quote: "First, we can see to it that not a man or woman now in the French camps whom Franco wants for his prisons or firing squads is sent back to Spain. And since they cannot remain permanently in France, we must help to bring them across the ocean. Mexico and other Latin-American countries are willing to receive them.

"Second, living in the French camps is better than facing a Franco military court only if we don't let them starve or die of disease and exposure. So, we must send hundreds of tons of food, clothing and medicine."

I have no authority to speak for this organization, and no permission to quote from their letters, but I feel it a duty to bring this appeal to the attention of as many as possible. ROBERT F. BAUER.

The Post Impressionist

Insignia In Stone

ONE SUNDAY afternoon nine years ago I took a walk out residential Sixteenth street as far as the Spanish Embassy. This was then, as now, a low formal house of pale stone sitting behind a half-moon driveway at the top of Meridian Hill. I had heard that Mrs. Henderson, mistress for many years of the red stone castle on the hill and famous in the Washington scene, had offered this house to the American Government as a gift to provide a permanent residence for the Vice President. According to the story, Mr. Coolidge, then Vice President, had declined the offer because he could not afford to maintain the house. Standing on the pavement that afternoon in front of the house, I became aware for the first time of the royal Spanish coat-of-arms cut in stone on the facade of the porte-cochere.

Alphonso XIII, styled His Most Catholic Majesty, the last of the Bourbons, was then King of Spain. Born in 1886, shortly after the death of his father, Alfonso claimed the distinction of being King from the moment of birth. A tall thin man with a dark mustache, he was often photographed and often appeared in the American newsreels and press. Looking at the official crest beneath the Bourbon crown that afternoon, I thought of Alfonso and remembered a story I had read not long before of a trip he had made alone some place in a racing car. I think I rather admired the man then because he appeared to be what Americans call "democratic" and was able to take the duties of kingship with levity. It never occurred to me (but I wonder if it did to him) that Alfonso would not die a King.

The day in April, 1931, that Alfonso lost his throne I remember well. There were extra papers that day—I had heard them being hawked in the streets all morning—and at lunch time I bought one to read of the latest political move in Europe. Sitting in the warm spring sunshine in a park, now and then looking up to see the pigeons swarming on the pavement, it seemed a long way from Washington to Spain. I tried to picture the excitement that must at that moment have been gripping Madrid and all of Spain and was glad that, since the Spanish people seemed to want to change their government they were able to do it without going to war.

Not long after that I noticed that there had been a change in the facade of the porte-cochere of the Spanish Embassy. The old royal crest spread beneath the Bourbon crown was gone, and in its place had appeared a new insignia in stone. To me, as a casual observer, there did not seem to be a great difference between the old seal and the new. To be sure, the crown had given way to what looked to be a curved piece of a castle parapet, and as far as I could tell the substitution of one piece of stone for another was the only change that this coup had caused in Washington.

When the so called "civil war" in Spain broke out three years ago, Washington lay under its blanket of summer heat. People—at least people in America—were surprised by the suddeness with which that war came. They read their papers on the way to work or after they got home again in the evenings, and then sat fanning themselves on porches in little towns or by open windows in the cities, discussing what they had read and congratulating themselves that they lived in America.

One evening that summer I listened to a discussion that made sharp contrasts between the Spanish civil war and our own war between the States. By some coincidence then a radio in the apartment next door brought us the tune "La Paloma" played with great spirit. "See!" the host said and mopped his brow. "To me that represents all of old Spain. And it's gone, I tell you. It's gone never to return."

"You still hear 'Dixie' played," a lady said.

"True, true," the host said. "But war is different now. It leaves nothing of the old behind it any more. My father was in our Civil War and I've heard him talk about it. It was terrible, of course, but by comparison our war, taking into account the softening of time and of retrospection, now appears a gentlemen's combat. Why, Northern soldiers in the South even went up to farm houses and asked for food, and if there was any they got it. Do you think that could happen nowadays? By and large, in our war the country broke itself into two sides of feeling, and it was taken for granted that all the people in a given State were on that side. Areas in the South were burned and laid to waste but not the whole South."

Suddenly the radio in the apartment next door ceased playing "La Paloma."

That was three years ago. The war has begun and been fought and ended. Only today I have read that in rural Spain the people can talk of nothing but this year's harvest. It is not as bountiful a harvest as Spain has had, there is not as much grain and some of the hills that once held vineyards are still brutally torn with the scars of wholesale death. But the soldiers of other flags are leaving in steady streams, and out of the maze of information furnished the world today the single thought that a largely agrarian people can so quickly turn again to harvest is very reassuring. It is not difficult to picture those hills and fields stretching away from ruined cities and towns—cities and towns that, pathetically, can never be rebuilt in exactly the same way they used to stand, or hold the same charm of color or age.

In the years that have passed since Alfonso XIII lost his throne, the world has suffered many changes. Even the stone set into the facade of a low, rambling house in Washington is now very nearly as weathered as the rest of the house. I have looked at it today and remembered sitting in the patio of that house smoking a long black cigar with an Ambassador who had no wish for war and apparently no premonition of it. Whatever the political future of Spain now, for the peace of the world it is to be hoped that the mistakes of the past, engulfing those who lived after the long line of Spaniards who brought so much of Europe to the New World, will never again become the tragedies of the future.

Limit In Pickets

I AM THINKING of a case in which it is supposed that a picket line has been placed around a little corner cigar store because the store sells a brand of cigarets manufactured by a big company which is having union troubles. It is one of those intricate scraps over jurisdiction, and is largely political, with both the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. claiming the personnel and wanting the numerical strength and the dues.

But the owner of this little cigar store knows nothing about the merits of the case and, anyway, it isn't his fight, because he is not a stockholder of the tobacco company but just a customer. His store is in Ohio, say, and the factory is way down South—somewhere. He doesn't even know just where—exactly.

The union which is striking the manufacturer sends word to this little economic royalist that if he doesn't refuse to sell this manufacturer's cigarets it will picket him. Moreover, anybody belonging to any branch or offshoot of the big national organization, whether C. I. O. or A. F. of L., who crosses the picket line to buy anything at this store, even non-forbidden goods, may be deemed to have struck a blow at the labor movement and, on conviction in a trial by his own local, may be kicked out and barred from employment at his trade.

Picket May Spread To Church Rites

THAT MAKES the boycott pretty tight, but just to make sure, the union puts a picket line across the front of the store.

But it happens that the owner of the store is a regular member of the congregation of a certain church in the neighborhood and a personal friend of the pastor. And the pastor, according to his right as a citizen, and, perhaps for the moral effect that his protest will have, decides to waltz right through the line and buy himself a package of gum.

At that, it becomes necessary to extend the picket line to cover the church, and the next Sunday when the people arrive for services they find pickets parading back and forth wearing signs declaring this church to be unfair to the Amalgamated Brotherhood of Cigaret Label Stickers or some such way to hell and gone in another part of the country.

The members of the congregation are a little sore and puzzled, but they file into the church, and as they pass through the line, zing! One woman gets conked with a throwing-tomato which smears up her Sunday hat, and a couple of the men are hustled around by strangers who yell, "who do you think you are shoving?" And belt them over with sneak punches. Then the line sets up a yell of "rat, scab, fink!" at the people going to church, and keep it up during the services.

The Labor Plot Grows Thicker

THE COPS COME, but this town has a labor administration and the police just make them pipe down. The church members who were knocked over in the scuffle want the cops to make a couple of pinches, offering to identify the pickets who slugged them, but the pickets gang around and a dozen or more of them are willing to swear to cross-charges that the church members started the punching. So nothing comes of that. Nobody wants to drag a church into a brawl, and the circumstances are such that the public might get an impression that the church was anti-labor.

It has now come to the point that members of this congregation have got to fire their pastor, which they naturally refuse to do, or keep out of their church, which would be a sin.

They claim that there is now an issue of religious freedom, but the unioneers retort that if Christ were on earth today he would surely hold a card in the carpenters' union and disown a church which had committed itself against labor and, in spirit, through the unrepudiated act of its pastor in crossing the line to buy a package of gum, had cynically flouted the law of the land which upholds the cigaret-label stickers' right of collective bargaining.

Even Union Men May Be Barred

IT GETS ALL tangled up in arguments and ideology and, meanwhile, some union men in the congregation have been tried, convicted and fired out of their unions and perpetually barred from employment for crossing a picket line to patronize a scab church.

I don't know what happens next, because picketing in the secondary, tertiary and further degrees up to infinity is still an experiment testing the patience of people who are picketed in disputes which are none of their business. Somewhere along the line there is a go-to-hell point.

Life In Labrador

ELLIOTT MERRICK has lived in Labrador. In "Frost and Fire" (Scribner's, $2.50), he has made a living book of the Labrador people, their struggles and their satisfactions, their characters, their ambitions, their comradeships, the conditions of their existence. This is an intensely interesting novel; and it is not too much to say that it is remarkable in the coalescence of the author's own "civilized" mind with those of the simple and stalwart men and women of his story, and in his reflection, without condescension or extravagance, of the lives they live. The book brings us a reflection, too, of the strange beauty of the sub-Arctic country; it brings us a reflection of courage and resource and tenderness; and that there is excitement aplenty in the story one need hardly say.

We first meet Jan McKenzie when he is a boy of 12, seated in his father's overloaded skiff on the upper reaches of Eskimo Bay, with an oar in his hand for fending off drifting trees or ice as the boat swoops past the dangerous mouth of the Caribou River. They have been sealing, duck hunting, collecting furs from their 200 traps scattered for a hundred miles about the Duck River country where their home is; now they are making their spring migration to the barren, ice-bound island coast that borders on "the finest cod fishing ground in the world." Judson McKenzie, Scottish born, had been a sailor on a British ship; long ago he deserted and settled in Labrador. His wife Keziah is a moon-faced Eskimo woman, sturdy, capable, religious, jealous, and more masterful than most wives in the primitive North. Jan, at 12, is sturdy and capable too. And even at 12 he is well acquainted with the one real evil before which they are helpless, the injustice of the cheating traders to whom they must sell their furs.

THEY ARE ALWAYS in debt to the trading agent to whom they take their fox and otter and the weasel which, they have heard, is called "ermine" in the "outside" country and is worn by kings. And the agent always can—and usually does—withhold for their debts the food and supplies they need: sugar and lard, powder and twine. The agent is the alien tyrant over all their lives; "he couldn't sail a boat or skin a fox," Jan meditates, "he couldn't light a fire in the wind when his hands were freezing, he could hardly step into a canoe without tipping it over. How could it be that he was the boss of all—even, it seemed, of the sky?" Jan begins to dream of becoming a trader himself, a very different kind of trader. Then his father dies, and at 12 Jan must become trapper and hunter on his own.

But if the injustice of "business" is a cruel hardship, the story of these Labrador families is no tale of complaint. The stuff of "Frost and Fire" is always positive, forthright, courageous. These men and women take hardships in their stride, just as they take cold and isolation and constant peril. When old French Peter is crippled by a sudden slip of his ax in the remote frozen wilderness, Jan and Joshua drag him for days, and hoist him hand over hand up a cliff, and bring him home. When Jan breaks his arm, alone on his winter trapping, he makes his way somehow back to the settlement, knowing every day how slim his chances are. And since he has had to leave his furs behind, the other men will go up through the wilderness to get them for him "as soon as the spring floods slack." They are "all brothers on the river," old Peter says. Alone for much of the hard-working year, the trappers and their families are none the less neighbors. And Jan feels himself to be neighbor and companion, too, to the snow and the trees and the wind.

And just as the swift-crowding incident of the story is framed in the beauty of the North, so Jan's active and struggling existence is sustained, and disturbed, and crowned at last, by a romance as clear and sturdy as it is genuinely poetic.

Meanwhile, the years run their course, "from early smelting and trouting to trapping bears and hunting caribou, from wood cutting to sealing, potato planting and skiff building; codfishing at Ice Tickle, back to Duck River, outfitting for the height of land;" 500 miles of trekking, as a matter of course. There is adventure everywhere, and adventure itself fulfills Jan's dream. But the adventure is never overstressed, the foreigner's point of view is never obtruded, the people are alive and natural. The details of everyday life, too, are intimate and effortless (the dogs' "haunches flattened as they crawled to start the loads"), and the strange and thrilling scene is a part of every day.

THE NEGRO migration from Southern fields to Northern cities is the material from which the Negro novelist, Waters E. Turpin, has fashioned his new book, "O Canaan!" (Doubleday, Doran, $2.50). And an excellent book it is, a book with thrust and sincerity, which evokes in its very confusions the confusion which is its essential theme. The primitive pictorial imagination of the Negro heritage has seized upon the vision of Canaan as an almost literal anticipation of the Chicago to which the migrants are bound; but as dauntless old Joe Benson and his family live out their destiny in the new land their fate is not primarilly racial. What happened to them happened not, basically, because they were Negroes, but because they were uprooted workers who came from the country to the city and grew rich and poor again in the years 1916-'30 in an American metropolis. And although the scenes and cast of characters are Negro the drama might have been—and in its fundamentals certainly has been—played out by white laborers as well.

Money Goes Begging

By Mark Sullivan

I AM GOING to write today about President Roosevelt's lending program. I have in my hand 31 newspaper clippings about it. I have on my desk 6 copies of the Congressional Record containing 54 arguments pro and con. And I have in my own head some ideas.

But I am going to dismiss most of that. For the most illuminating comment on the lending program I turn to the Des Moines (Iowa) Register of one day last month. The comment is not on the editorial page—though the Register editorials give exceptionally sound discussion of national questions.

But the story that most illuminates Mr. Roosevelt's lending program is on the news pages. It is a dispatch from the little town of Booneville, some 15 miles west of Des Moines. I quote and condense:

"Booneville, Iowa.—There is practically 'no sale for money' here. The Booneville Savings Bank is going out of business September first . . . It has $267,000 of its depositors' money, and has been asking them to come and get it since May 29th . . . The reason for the bank's going out of business is inability to use the money. The bank has been paying 2½ per cent interest on deposits and can't make sufficient loans to earn it. 'We are going to pay off our depositors and quit business September 1st,' says C. C. Cook, the affable gray-haired cashier who runs the bank. 'The principal reason we are quitting is that we do not know what to do with your money,' depositors were told in letters when the decision to liquidate voluntarily was made. The bank has been open every business day in 33 years except during the 1933 bank holiday."

Why Can't Bank Loan Its Money?

NOW READER, ask yourself the question: If the Booneville bank could loan its money, would it shut up shop? That question hardly needs to be answered. If you insist on an answer, it is in the words of the dispatch quoted above: "The reason for the bank's going out of business is inability to use the money." The answer is in the letter of the Booneville cashier to his depositors, "We do not know what to do with your money."

Next, ask yourself this question: Why can't the bank loan its money? The answer is obvious. It is because no one wants to borrow. That is, no prudent businessman wants to borrow, nor prudent farmer, nor prudent other person. No doubt there are plenty of willing borrowers, in Booneville and thereabouts, as everywhere else. The Booneville cashier can find them on any street corner. But they are not prudent businessmen.

No one wants to borrow who is the type that won't borrow unless he can see his way clear to paying back. There is no one to borrow who sees how he can make prudent use of the money, make enough to pay interest, make a profit for himself, and pay back the principal when due.

Prudent Borrowers Difficult To Find

TRUE, BOONEVILLE is a very small town. Conditions there may be extreme—I do not happen to know. But if the Booneville conditions are extreme, they are not unusual. On the contrary, they are common. Booneville is a microcosm of the country. Practically every bank official in the United States who reads this story of the Booneville bank will recognize that, to some degree, he is up against the same situation. His bank is overflowing with money, potential credit, for which he can't find use. He can't find borrowers. That is, he can't find prudent borrowers—he can't find borrowers of the type who won't borrow until they can see their way to pay back. Officials of big city banks tramp the streets looking for borrowers. Vice presidents of city banks nowadays have become salesmen; they ring doorbells with almost the ubiquity and pertinacity of a soap salesman.

If the banks can't find borrowers, that is, prudent borrowers, then where is the Administration going to find borrowers for that 2½ billion lending fund, after and if Congress passes it? If the Booneville bank can't find borrowers, where can the Government find them?

The Administration will find borrowers all right—no need to worry about that. But will they all be prudent borrowers? That question, I imagine, the reader can answer for himself.

Fear Is Cause Of Credit Restraint

THE FINAL QUESTION, and the nub of the whole matter, is: Why do prudent borrowers not borrow the money that is already in the banks begging to be borrowed? Why do businessmen and shop-keepers and manufacturers refrain from extending their operations? Why do men not in business refrain, if they are prudent, from going into business? In short, why does business not recover and go forward?

Mainly the answer is fear. Some of the fear, such as fear of European war, is not within the Administration's power to help.

But much of the fear existed before the war scares. Largely it is fear of the Administration, of things the Administration has done and other things it may do. Just what these things are, there is not space here to set down in detail. If the Administration really wants business to recover, the true path is to remove these fears—and thus set business free to borrow the abundance of money that is already in the banks and looking desperately for prudent borrowers to borrow it.

Ill fares the land, when power accumulates at Washington, while the Boonevilles decay.

Text of Doctors' Case Decision

Text of Justice James M. Proctor's opinion in District Court yesterday, sustaining several demurrers to the indictment of the American Medical Association, the District Medical Society, and others for "conspiracy to restrain trade" in their opposition to group medicine, follows in full:

The indictment charges a conspiracy to restrain trade in the District of Columbia in violation of section 3 of the Sherman anti-trust act. The defendants are American Medical Association, a national organization of physicians; two of its subordinate bodies, the Medical Society of the District of Columbia and Harris County Medical Society of Houston, Tex.; also the Washington Academy of Surgery, not fully identified; and 21 individual doctors, all members of the national body, some officers thereof, others members and officers of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia. All defendants have demurred to the indictment. It is very long, and only abbreviated references will be made to such parts as are deemed necessary to this decision.

Group Health Associations, Inc., (hereinafter called Association), is alleged to be an association of Government employes, engaged "in the business of arranging for the provision of medical care and hospitalization to its members and their dependents on a risk sharing prepayment basis." Medical care is provided by a staff of salaried practitioners engaged in group practice under a medical director. A clinic is maintained, and limited hospital expenses are defrayed for the members and their dependents.

Anti-Trust Charges Are Set Forth

The defendants are alleged to have conspired (1) to restrain the association in its business of arranging for the provision of medical care and hospitalization to its members and their dependents, (2) to restrain such members in obtaining, by co-operative efforts, adequate medical care for themselves and their dependents from doctors engaged in group medical practice, (3) to restrain doctors serving on the medical staff of the association in pursuit of their callings, (4) to restrain other doctors in the District of Columbia, including some of the individual defendants, in pursuit of their callings, and (5) to restrain Washington hospitals in the operation of their businesses.

The demurrers raise basic objections to the indictment. Of first importance is the contention that none of the alleged restraints has reference to a trade; that section 3 comprehends only those occupations in commercial life carried on in the marts of trade activity; therefore, that the medical profession and the businesses of the association and hospitals do not constitute "trade" within the purview of the statute. Against this contention the Government's position is that all who are occupied in any activity whereby they supply money's worth for full money payment are engaged in trade; that section 3 does cover all such activities; therefore, that the practice of medicine and the businesses of the association and hospitals fall within the scope of the statute.

Is medical practice a trade within the meaning of section 3 of the Sherman act? In my opinion, it is not. I think the matter is settled by the Supreme Court in the case of Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers vs. United States, 286 U. S., 527. That case squarely presented the question whether "trade" is used in a narrow sense, as importing "only traffic in the buying, selling or exchanging of commodities," or in a broader sense. It fairly called for a definition of the word. This the court undertook to give. In so doing, it declared that the word "trade" was used in section 3 of the Sherman act in the general sense attributed to it by Justice Story in the case of The Schooner Nymph, 1 Summ., 516; 18 Fed. Cases 506, No. 10,388.

Story's Opinion Key to Ruling

The court, intending to give a full and broad meaning, adopted for its own definition of "trade" the language of Justice Story in that early case, quoting therefrom as follows:

"The argument for the claimant insists that 'trade' is here used in its most restrictive sense and as equivalent to traffic in goods, or buying and selling in commerce or exchange. But I am clearly of opinion that such is not the true sense of the word, as used in the thirty-second section. In the first place, the word 'trade' is often and, indeed, generally used in a broader sense, as equivalent to occupation, employment, or business, whether manual or mercantile. Wherever any occupation, employment or business is carried on for the purpose of profit, or gain, or a livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions, it is constantly called a trade. Thus, we constantly speak of the art, mystery or trade of a housewright, a shipwright, a tailor, a blacksmith and a shoemaker, though some of these may be and sometimes are, carried on without buying or selling goods."

Thus we have this recent controlling decision defining the word trade, and expressly excepting the learned professions, of which admittedly the practice of medicine is one. The decision is in harmony with others rendered before and after the Cleaners & Dyers case. See Fed. Trade Com. vs. Beladam, 283 U. S. 643; Graves vs. Minnesota, 272 U. S. 400, and Semler vs. Board, 294 U. S. 608. The restraints alleged against the doctors in specifications 3 and 4 of the charge are clearly not within the purview of the statute. I cannot accept the refinements of thought whereby it is argued for the Government that the court in quoting Justice Story was not defining "trade," but merely illustrating the narrow and broad concepts of the word. Nor does the decision lend any support to the idea that by enacting Section 3 Congress intended to exercise all its plenary power over the District of Columbia to prohibit restraints against all business activities of the citizen. The court has simply said that Congress meant to deal effectively with the evils resulting from contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade—not all restraints upon every business, but only those affecting trade. Doubtless, in the fulness of its power over the District, Congress could have prohibited restraints upon all occupations of the citizen. But there is nothing in the history of the legislation to suggest the need for such a broad reach of power, and clearly it was not intended.

Government's Case, Arguments Listed

The Government has cited many English and American cases dealing with restrictive covenants ancillary to agreements by doctors concerning the sale or conduct of their practice, in which the courts have applied the common law doctrine as to "contracts in restraint of trade." It is argued that these cases have, in a legal sense, drawn medical practice within the orbit of trade, giving to the word a common law meaning to include the professions. From this, it is further argued that at common law restraints upon the practice of medicine were "restraints of trade" and that Congress in the Sherman act used the term in such a sense. But those cases are beside the point. They do not involve any question as to whether medicine is a trade. They accept the universal understanding of it as a profession. Nor do they define "trade." They merely apply a rule of law. At most such cases serve only to illustrate the development of a legal doctrine, having its origin in contracts concerning tradesmen, which became known as the doctrine "against restraint of trade," and which in course of time was extended and applied to agreements by doctors respecting their professional practice.

The case of Pratt vs. Medical Association, K. B. 244, upon which the prosecution places much reliance, is interesting in the similarity of facts there proven and here alleged; yet the legal aspects differ greatly. The suit was a civil action in tort by the plaintiff doctors to recover damages for malicious injury to their means of livelihood. The claim was grounded upon common law principles which hold every man liable in damages for wrongful injury to another's means of livelihood. Combination was not the gist of the action; that circumstance only increased the damage. So here, if the livelihood of group practitioners has been injured by the wrongful acts of the defendants, they, too, have redress in a civil court. But the charge in the present case is criminal, and to stand must find its sanction solely in the statute.

Broad Analysis Of Earlier Finding

Coming now to other specifications of the charge, 1, 2 and 5. Is the association, or are its members or the hospitals, engaged in trade within the meaning of section 3 of the statute? The association is alleged to be a nonprofit co-operative association of Government employes engaged in the business of arranging for the provision of medical care and hospitalization to its members and their dependents. The plan and purpose, it is charged, was to hinder and obstruct the association in procuring and retaining on its staff qualified doctors; to hinder and obstruct its doctors from the privilege of consulting with others and using the facilities of the Washington hospitals; and to hinder and obstruct the association in obtaining access to hospital facilities for its members and its doctors from treating and operating upon their patients in the hospitals. The foregoing references to the Washington hospitals, in the plan set forth, forms the only support for the fifth specification, charging a purpose to restrain the business of operating said hospitals.

In previous discussion of the cleaners and dyers case, I have expressed the view that the court in giving to the word "trade" its full meaning adopted the definition of Justice Story as its own. That definition covers both the narrow and broad understanding of the term. Its most restrictive sense comprehended "traffic in goods, or buying and selling in commerce or exchange." Manifestly, neither the association, its members or the hospitals are engaged in that sort of trade. Nor do they, in my opinion, come within the broader class, of manual or mercantile pursuits carried on for profit or gain without buying or selling goods. The business of the association was not of a manual or mercantile nature. It was a nonprofit co-operative institution whose corporate object was to render service in providing medical and hospital care for its members. The argument for the Government that the business of the cleaners and dyers involved merely the sale of service, and yet was held to be a trade, overlooks the fact that the very essence of that service was the skillful use of labor and material, quite equal to the "art, mystery or trade" of a tailor, blacksmith or shoemaker, mentioned by Justice Story in illustration of manual and mercantile pursuits falling within the category of trade.

Precedent Cases On Trade Cited

Other Federal and State decisions bear out the conception of trade as an occupation or pursuit of a mercantile character. See Semler vs. Board, 294 U. S., 608; Toxaway Hotel Co. vs. Smathers & Co., 216 U. S., 439; U. S. Hotel Co., vs. Niles, 134 Fed. 235; Harms vs. Cohen, 279 Fed., 276 (as to musical composers); People vs. Klaw, 406 N. Y. S., 341 (as to the theater); Metropolitan Co. vs. Hammerstein, 147 N. Y. S., 532 (as to the insurance business); Whitcomb vs. Reid, 31 Miss., 569 (as to dentistry), and State vs. McClellan, 31 A. L. R., 527 (as to the laundry business). The thesis of Government counsel, taken from the opinion in Brighton College vs. Marriott, 1 K. B., 312, 316, that "trade" embraces all who habitually "supply money's worth for full money payment," and their contention that the statute should be so broadly construed represents an extreme position which does violence to the common understanding of "trade," rejects authoritative decisions of our courts, and ignores cardinal rules of statutory construction. Their proposition encompasses all gainful work of the citizen. Can it be supposed that if Congress had any such drastic intention it would not have made the purpose clear? Certainly it is not for the courts to stretch an old statute to fit new uses for which it was never intended. United States vs. Cradwell, 243 U. S., 476, 488. That would be nothing short of "judicial legislation." The charge that members of the association were restrained (specification 2) is devoid of legal substance. Their efforts to obtain group medical care is expressed through the medium of the association, a corporate entity, distinct from the individual members. Upon no theory can they be treated as engaged in the business of the corporation. Finally, when the indictment is carefully studied in all its parts, each in relation to the others, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that in its substantial realities the scheme set forth directly centered upon various forms of restraint to be exerted against physicians in rendering treatment and care to their patients, and that all else is incidental to that design. If restraint upon doctors was the only real direct and immediate effect, any indirect effects upon the association or hospitals would not suffice to support the charges as to them. Standard Oil Co. vs. United States, 283 U. S., 163, 179; Nash vs. United States, 229 U. S., 373.

The defendants have raised objections to the sufficiency of the indictment as a pleading. These go mainly to the claim that many of the allegations dealing with essential and material features of the charge are vague, indefinite and uncertain. The objections are far too numerous to deal with separately. There is merit to many of them. The indictment is afflicted with vague and uncertain statements. In some instances, material facts are altogether lacking. An important instance concerns the charge that one purpose of the conspiracy was to restrain the business of the Washington hospitals. The indictment is barren of any statement of the business methods used by a single hospital in the letting of its facilities and service to patients. This is fatal to that particular specification, for without such facts it cannot be known whether loss of patients through operation of the scheme would injuriously affect the economic welfare of any hospital. Moreover, the particular plan and purpose of the conspiracy as respects the hospitals is only inferentially stated in that part which deals with the plan and purpose of the scheme as against the association and its doctors. Such a method of stating a material part of the charge does not meet the fundamental requirement that a criminal accusation be stated fully, clearly, and with certainty. United States vs. Hess, 124 U. S. 483; United States vs. Geare, 54 App. D. C. 30; McMullen vs. United States, 68 App. D. C. 302.

Indictment's Terms Questiond by Court

A question also arises as to whether the charge is laid against the individual doctors named in the caption. This is due to the pleader's statement that they "will be referred to hereinafter as the defendants," whereas thereafter the charge itself is laid only against "the defendants," who the caption indicates include only the several medical societies. It does seem that as to such simple, yet all important matters, an indictment should be so drafted as to exclude any question whatever.

The inducement, as well as the charging part, setting forth the plan and purpose and acts done to effectuate the conspiracy, abound in uncertain statements. Inference, opinion and conjecture are also freely indulged. This is especially so in the inducement, much of which seems unnecessary to a statement of the charge. It is questionable whether some of it would be deemed relevant or competent in proof of the offense. Every indictment should be confined to a clear and dispassionate statement of essential facts. Thus, an accused can better know the exact offense with which he is charged and will not be confused in making his defense. Ordinarily improper matter in the inducement, unnecessary to support the charge, will not vitiate an indictment. It will be treated as surplusage and disregarded. But I doubt if such treatment would suffice to relieve these defendants of the prejudice likely to arise by an indictment which smacks so much of a highly colored, argumentative discourse against them. It must be remembered that when a case is finally submitted to a jury for their secret deliberations the indictment goes with them.

Corporate Position Denies Trade Class

The contention is made that the association is operating illegally in the fields of medicine and insurance; that as its activities are unlawful they do not come under the protection of the statute against restraints of trade. The indictment describes the association as a nonprofit, co-operative society, organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, engaged in the business of arranging for the provision of medical care and hospitalization to its members and their dependents on a risk-sharing prepayment basis. This is enough to indicate that it was organized under those sections of the general corporation laws providing for incorporation of societies for benevolent, charitable, educational, literary, musical, scientific or missionary purposes, including societies formed for mutual improvement or promotion of the arts. Thus, the view is strengthened that the association was not engaged in trade, for such corporate functions clearly would not fall under that category. However, I do not think it can be said from the bare allegations of the indictment, taken in their entirety, that the association is engaged in medical practice or insurance. Whether or not that is so could better be decided upon the evidence if in a trial it should be deemed pertinent to inquire into the question.

Finally, Section 3 of the Sherman act, upon which the indictment is founded, has been attacked by defendants as unconstitutional. It is argued that the statute is too vague and uncertain to fix a definite standard of guilt, or inform one accused of violating it of the nature and cause of the accusation. I do not agree with the argument. If I did, the circumstances would not justify me declaring the statute invalid, for that would be unnecessary, hence inappropriate, in view of my holding that the indictment is bad on other grounds.

The several demurrers to the indictment are sustained. Judgment will be entered accordingly.

JAMES M. PROCTOR, Justice.

The Once Over

Close-Up Of Mars

Today is the day when Mars comes close enough to the earth to scrape off the paint. It is only 36,022,300 miles from us, which is almost as close as the last race between Roosevelt and Hoover.

Telescopes everywhere are trained on the planet to see what it is like, whether there is anybody home and whether there is any animal (or dictator) life on it.

Mars, through the telescope, is a light red in color. From Mars we look about the same color under the New Deal. Two-thirds of Mars looks red all the while. The color of the other third changes with the seasons, indicating vegetable life, up to and including spinach.

If there is vegetable life there must be animal life. And where there is animal life there must be subways, swing music and politicians.

If there is animal life, in other words, there must be living beings, and wherever there are living beings there are screeno nights.

Astronomers are puzzled by dark patches on Mars. But why worry? They may merely indicate a planned economy.

There is only 1 per cent as much oxygen in the Mars air as there is in our air. This clearly indicates that the inhabitants must be the type of people we find in telephone booths, rathskellers and excursion buses. The temperature is, to say the least, erratic. It varies from 30 to 80 degrees in the day time and drops as low as 100 below zero after supper. Mars never knows any ice cube problem. Plumbers do pretty well.

Mars appears to be full of canals. A Martian who plays golf and has a hook or slice must always be looking in one for his ball.

Why should a place have so many canals? This is what astronomers want to know. It is also what Martians want to know. Anybody who has lived in America the last eight years knows how those canals get going. All it means is that Mars has a lot of Senator Peppers.

The belief that there are living beings on Mars grows. Some astronomers even report pyorrhea, judiciary scandals, zippers, Japanese beetles and quiz programs there.

The earth now stares at Mars prepared to be amazed, dumbfounded or shocked. But wait till Mars gets a good look at the earth!

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Exercises Slowly Taken Make for A Slim Waistline

THE ASTONISHING thing about the feminine figure is its adaptability. For the last decade, the waistline has been shrinking steadily and this year it is a good two inches less than last. It's no longer a question of wanting to have a slim waist . . . it's practically compulsory!

To achieve this slim-waisted appearance, some women are heroically squeezing into the old-time corsets with stays and laces.

Actually, this trend toward smaller waists is a healthy one which does not take excess fat into account. You are expected to have a slim, muscularly girdled midriff and to stand stretched tall so that there is no slack.

Exercise Slowly

Fortunately, there is no need to work yourself into a lather to slim this measurement. All the twisting, bending and stretching movements should be performed accurately—and usually that means slowly—to bring into play all those powerful but lazy muscles girdling the waist.

One of the most effective of the stretching exercises is guaranted to make you stiff this week and perceptibly thinner next. Here it is:

Stand with the feet parallel and fairly close together, arms straight out at the sides at shoulder level. Now, without moving the arms, shoulders or hips, push the ribcage up and out at the right side. This pulls you out like an accordion and makes you bend to the left. Continue pushing up with the ribs to your limit, then to position and repeat. There is no use in rushing through this exercise. The whole point is to get a thorough stretch between ribs and hip and the side and it should be done very slowly and deliberately. Perform first on the right side for five times, then on the left.

To Flatten Tummy

Here is an exercise which flattens the tummy while twisting off waistline inches:

Stand with the back of the hips pressed firmly against a heavy tables or chair, the abdominal muscles pulled up and the arms straight out at the sides. Keeping the hips against the table, twist very slowly at the waist until you are facing sidewards. The hips and arms should not move. Hold for a second, and twist back in the opposite direction.

You will get the most satisfying result from these exercises if you take them slowly and concentrate on the large groups of muscles networked between waist and hips. They are the very foundation of slimmess.

Gotham in a Dilemma: To Hide Head in Shame Or Boast of Iniquities

New York, July 26.

NO SOONER had I landed from my California junket than I found the city of my choice beaten to its knees by the moral blast of the venerable Governor of Michigan, Brother Dickinson. Pictured by his excellency as a sinhole of iniquity where a pure and lovely young girl is unsafe 2 feet from her mother, New York, at the moment, didn't know whether to howl or hide its head in shame.

ALICE HUGHES

Other Governors who had attended the same "high-life functions" in Albany and at our Fair, or the Flushing fandango, as well as our peppery Mayor LaGuardia rather cruelly blasted back at the aged and revered executive.

The matter really grew red-hot and steaming when Miss Willo Sheridan, officially dubbed "Miss Michigan Aviation," arrived in our midst to do her stuff at the Fair. This pretty 23-year-old redhead from Detroit visited many of our jolliest "hellish brinks" without once toppling over, and had herself an elegant time while on furlough from the motor plant where she toils.

The attractive Wolverine cheerfully admitted taking a couple of Scotches-and-splash "for the stomach's sake" while visiting the night club belt, and puffed at a "coffin-nail" as she talked to reporters, whose pet she immediately became. Which was the more delightful ambassador from the great State of Michigan—the Governor or Miss Sheridan? One guess is all you get, and you can't flunk it.

The whole rather comical and certainly petty pother has put us New Yorkers on the horns of that dilemma. Shall we prove that we are no more evil and dangerous than any other community, and thus shatter the firm belief of millions of American citizens? Or shall we cynically and scornfully admit our wicked ways, and thus hope to boost the summer business by luring visitors who want to see our sin with their own eyes? A fine pickle this modest town is in!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN: Good to be home—cool weather, all the girl chums on deck, and Mr. Rockefeller's eight Fifth avenue elms thriving mightily.

Now that Whitney Bourne has married the wealthy Stanton Griffis and sailed away on the Queen Mary for her honeymoon, show business has probably lost the most stage-struck girl that ever came out of the social register. Our Whitney is a very luscious blonde who didn't have to work a lick, but who simply could not deny the urge to act. She adored it, but she suffered from one handicap, her height. She was so tall that it took a mighty rangy fellow to play love scenes with her, with the result that the other actors might look like midgets. Now I wonder if marriage will really stifle her terrific play-acting yen—or whether she will inch her way back into the theater some day. After all, she's only 26, and very lovely.

THE HAPPIEST kids in town right now are Joan Dempsey, 6, and Barbara, 3. Their big pappy, Jack, the former pugilist and current restaurateur, is playing with them again, after his winning bout with peritonitis. I saw the trio on Central Park West, where they live, the other day, and it was a wondrously winning sight. Cute little girls, that pair.

My pet garden page carried this headline Sunday—"Borers Are Menace to Dahlias." Humph! To dahlias, indeed! To every man and woman!

NEW YORK is a desert to hundreds of Gotham girls, since Franchot Tone fully recovered his health and went back to the Coast. But they perked up a bit when Gary Cooper and Douglas Fairbanks the younger arrived the other day. But, of course, those two wonder men were accompanied by their beautiful wives—which meant that they were unavailable for free-lance supping and dancing in these parts. Franchot, the lamb, was on his own.

Foolproof Jelly Roll Contributed By Bottled Gas Cooking Expert

Mrs. Gibbons Is Full-Time Home Service Adviser for Users of Fuel That Aids Rural Residents

Favorite recipes of leading economists of Washington are presented daily in this column.

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor

A GOOD SAMARITAN to rural communities, country club homes and famous country estates is the guest food editor today. Mrs. Ora Gibbons, the home service adviser for Philgas department, Phillips Petroleum Co., is from the land of the pink rhododendron—the State of Washington. Educated in home economics at the College of Puget Sound, Tacoma, Wash., she became the home service director of the Washington Gas and Electric Co. in that city. As a pioneer home economist in the field of "bottled gas," Mrs. Gibbons became the first full time home service adviser engaged exclusively in serving consumers of this gas.

Mrs. Gibbons

Each year Mrs. Gibbons travels 25,000 miles over rural roads. "Ten years ago," Mrs. Gibbons says, "rural women were denied the advantages of city gas, but today they can enjoy the time-saving conveniences of modern gas ranges, automatic water heaters, and gas refrigerators through the use of bottled or tank gas." Mrs. Gibbons also contributes food articles to her company's monthly publication. Mrs. Gibbons' favorite recipe and one also a favorite with rural and farm women is a foolproof jelly roll which makes a superb base for jelly.

Jelly Roll

Sift together ¾ cup cake flour, ½ teaspoon baking powder and ¼ teaspoon salt. Into a large bowl place 4 egg whites and into a smaller one place the 4 folks. To the yolks add 1 teaspoon vanilla or lemon flavoring. Beat the whites with a rotary beater until stiff. Add gradually ¾ cup sugar, continuing beating with the rotary beater until all is added. Lift the beater from the whites and beat the yolks until very thick. Fold the yolks into the whites. Then fold in the sifted flour carefully. The jelly roll pan should be greased, lined with waxed paper, and the waxed paper greased. Spread the batter over the pan. Bake 13 minutes in a 400 degree oven. Turn out on a clean towel. Spread with jelly. Roll by picking up the edge of the towel nearest you, and holding it tight enough to be straight, draw it to the opposite end of the roll. If it is properly baked it will not be necessary to trim the edges before rolling. To cool, set on edge so that it will not unroll, or hang the ends of the towel on a clothes line with the roll in the center.

Learn Nursing at Home

WHAT A SENSE of security it gives you—when someone's sick or accidents happen—to have authoritative nursing information right at hand.

What to do before the doctor comes? How to follow his orders efficiently?

Does Dad collapse on a scorching day? It may be heat prostration. If so, he will be covered with cold perspiration, have an anxious look, breathe rapidly.

Send for the doctor, put your patient to bed and apply external heat to his feet. If pulse is weak, give a stimulant.

You know that baby has colic by his long loud cry, his clenched fists, drawn-up knees, rigid abdomen. One simple effective treatment is to place him on his stomach on a well-covered hot water bottle.

A rusty nail in Junior's foot? Always wise to call the doctor, but meantime cleanse the wound thoroughly with soap and water, apply peroxide. Then soak foot in a hot strong epsom salts solution.

How to give an alcohol sponge to a feverish patient? Avoid chills by keeping his feet warm with a hot water bag, the abdomen covered with a towel. Protect the bed by placing bath towels under each part of the body as you sponge it.

Correct nursing technique is really simple, you'll find—and what a lot of worry, extra steps it saves you!

In our 40-page booklet, "Practical Instruction for the Home Nurse," a registered nurse gives complete instructions for looking after patients at home. Explains proper care for pregnancy, the new baby. Tells how to recognize, nurse contagious illnesses, what to do for post-operative patients, how to meet emergencies.

Today's Health Talk

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Whether overweight is a disease or just a constitutional condition is debatable, but what has been said about poverty, that it is no disgrace to be poor but it might as well be, applies to obesity. If it is not a disease, it might as well be, because the treatments that are suggested for it would fill a large library of medical textbooks.

On the side of those who regard it as a disease are Drs. Newburgh and Cones, of Ann Arbor, who have found that obese patients having sugar in the urine lose it when the weight is reduced. Furthermore, they will not thereafter have sugar in the urine, regardless of the diet consumed, provided they do not gain weight. In former times they would be considered to have diabetes, but it is really only the glycosuria of obesity.

One explanation of this condition is that the liver is so infiltrated with fat that it does not function properly. It is well known that the liver is concerned with the nutrition of sugar.

It is remarkable how many theories have been advanced to explain obesity—remarkable considering that in 98 per cent of all cases the cause is simply consumption of too much food. Heredity and constitutional build play a role in the production of obesity, but they are the foundation on which the superstructure of extra food is built.

In treating obesity, reliance is mainly placed on diet. Extra exercise is not necessary; patients lose weight on a proper diet even if they remain in bed. Measurements of weight loss through exercise are somewhat misleading. A football player may lose as much as 15 pounds during a game. But most of this is water loss. Only about a third of a pound is actual flesh. The water loss is regained within a few hours.

A proper diet for obesity must be balanced.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Should Girl Get Job, Leave Home and Give Up College Work, to Escape Mother's Vile Abuse?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a junior in college, nearly 20 years old. My problem is my mother . . . Every time her anger is aroused, I am subjected to a tongue-lashing and must stand there quietly while she calls me vile names. If I say one word, she has something handy to throw at me. Once, before I learned not to talk back to her, I was hit in the mouth with the heel of a slipper during one of her tantrums.

Regardless of how angry my mother makes me, I have never called her a name or struck back at her. But I have to submit to such treatment, simply because I am dependent upon her help to finish my education. I have always respected her, but I have never loved her. Don't you think children should be respected by their parents, as well as the other way around?

I work during the school term to help pay for my tuition, and during the summer I work three or four days a week and give my earnings to my mother. My actual problem is this: Should I keep the money I make this summer and pay for a room at school next semester, so that I will not have to live at home? I can make enough additional during the year to pay for my meals; and my parents (I think) will pay for my tuition.

Or should I try to get a permanent job now, and a room or apartment in the city, and give up the idea of finishing my education? I am capable of holding a job, as I have worked since I was 14 years old. I have four sisters who left home and got married on account of mother. But I don't want to do anything foolish. I do so much want to finish my education, but still, I think I'll go insane if I have to live with my mother much longer. Please help me. Thank you. CO-ED.

Farsighted Course

DEAR CO-ED: Any parent who habitually tongue-lashes his child, calls him vile names and subjects him to physical abuse is "sowing the wind," and running grave risk of "reaping the whirlwind," either in the form of a counter-attack or the complete and final loss of that child's respectful consideration. If you have always shown your mother outward respect, in spite of her inexcusably villainous behavior, you have given her far better treatment than she deserves. No parent has the right to expect from a child any better brand of consideration than that which he gives the child.

It is axiomatic that whoever takes up the sword shall perish by it, and nowhere is this more true than in parent-child relationships. Violence almost invariably breeds violence and insurrection. Yet it is distinctly to the credit of your blood stream, fortunately endowed with better genes than those which seem to have gone into the shaping of your mother's personality, that you have the self control and consciousness of human dignity to refrain from striking back at her with her own gutter tactics.

If your story may be accepted at face value, then there is no question that your mother is unfit to serve you as guardian—socially, financially or in other way. That being the case, it is downright unwise for you to turn over any more of your earnings to her—since, in keeping them under your control, you can thereby make plans for removing yourself outside the sphere of her demoralizing influence. I approve completely of your plan to live on the campus next year, if this can be arranged. And I am sure it can, particularly if you will enlist the assistance of the college's Dean of Women in working out your plans.

Any able educator would immediately recognize the heartbreaking handicap to scholastic efficiency, under which you are currently laboring. And where the student thus unnecessarily handicapped is sincerely desirous of finishing his college course, with credit to himself and to the institution, I am sure his academic advisers would do all in their power to ease his burden. If the Dean of Women is made completely conversant with your home situation, you may depend upon it that she will use her influence to help you finance your own education, in future.

Because college graduates are nearly everywhere given preference, by business and professional employers today, over newcomers of lesser credentials, you would be making an immeasurably sound investment for the future in completing your education before looking for a permanent job. Whatever sacrifices you may have to make to complete your schooling will be less than the continuous penalty you probably would have to pay if you were to go into business without the scholastic certification of a sheepskin. I am not saying that a college education is indispensable to distinguished achievement. But there is no denying that the average citizen is a sucker for labels; and a college degree is a helpful adornment to the boy or girl who is looking for a toehold in one of the professions.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Godey's Book Inspires New Boudoir Style

Sentimental Fashions, Graceful Frills Are Revived for Bedroom

By Elizabeth McRae Boykin.

ONCE MORE Godey's Lady's Book comes into the fashion picture. A leading New York store recently exhibited a series of dressing tables and curtains ensembled with negligees, all inspired from old pages out of Godey's Lady's Book, that fascinating magazine of a sentimental era.

Although life is very different in many ways from that against which those romantic figures moved, there is many an idea for contemporary life that can be borrowed from their gracious ways. Especially for bedroom decorations. Below are notes we made on this interesting series of displays:

"Bow festooned clouds of white"—Curtains, dressing table skirt and negligee all of sheerest white organdy with big black velvet bows.

"Prim ric-rac and dotted swiss"—A swag-topped window of blue with white dots hung over side curtains of white with blue dots and a dressing table skirt to match, then a negligee of the two fabrics combined with ruffled prettiness.

"Billowing folds of plaid"—This costume from Godey's is interpreted in a present-day version by the use of a plaid mousseline de soie in petunia shades of soft cerise and dull green, trimmed with petunia tinted gros-grain ribbon. The dressing table and curtains are in white with big bows and tie-backs in the plaid mousseline and finished with the petunia gros-grain . . . all full and abundantly made.

"Bucolic checks and shirrings"—Pink and blue checked gingham in wide ruffles on white for dressing table and curtain ensemble with the negligee to match that is both cool and flattering.

"Paniered skirts of sprigged dimity"—Here lavender with wide flared ruffles is the theme, a dainty color to introduce for a bedroom and a flattering one to wear.

Mrs. Paul V. McNutt Will Add Much to the Capital's Social Life

Natural, Pretty, She Delights in Being the Wife of a Politician Despite Rootless Quality of Life, Because She Likes People

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor

SHE'S AS NATURAL as they come; charming, but not in a studied fashion; and pretty without being a glamour girl in the Hollywood sense.

She takes neither herself nor her position too seriously; seems entirely conscious of both; and talks with a disarming frankness that is all too rare on the distaff side of the political scene.

She's tall; slim as a willow wand; and bronzed from a summer sun that has beat down on her in many a golf game this season.

She likes horseback riding too, and the out-of-doors anywhere she finds it; but she admits she takes her sports as sports, not as work. "I'm good at them in only a matronly and dignified way," she says, with a twinkle in her blue eyes.

She has a rich voice and a delicious sense of humor that curves her lips in a smile and dimples her cheeks at the slightest provocation.

She admits, without quibbling, that a good two-thirds of her interests center around her handsome husband and their 18-year-old daughter, but you feel she has allowed neither to absorb all her attention and time.

She is not a homebody in the mousey sense of the word; yet she can literally and figuratively do the sweeping and dusting when necessary, look after a house generally as well as the next one, and still find time to read the papers and keep her fingers on the pulse of current events.

Doesn't Mind Husband's 'Date'

These few facts were gathered yesterday about Mrs. Paul V. McNutt shortly after she arrived in town for a three-day house-hunting search. I found out, also, that she's an unusual wife. She wasn't the slightest bit annoyed when her husband failed to meet her at the train and went a-lunching with another lady before he dropped by to see his family.

Before this goes any further, I'd better add that his "luncheon date" was with the Secretary of Labor. Later, as Mrs. McNutt and I were talking in her suite at the Mayflower, her husband arrived. There was a merry and affectionate greeting and a bit of quipping about their not having seen each other sooner.

But before he came, I had a pleasant half hour with Mrs. McNutt, and I hadn't talked with her two minutes before I could understand why her friends are loud in their praise of her and why her name and fame as a gracious hostess have spread abroad.

Still Calls Indiana 'Home'

Incidentally, she has a host of acquaintances here, and she knows she will like Washington. Not having yet looked over the local housing situation, she hasn't the remotest idea where she wants to live. She would like "some simple place; not too large."

"Indiana will continue to be home," she said. The McNutt apartment in Indianapolis will stay open, and the family will be dropping in there ever so often.

According to present plans, Miss Louise McNutt, who studied at Tudor Hall before going with her parents to the Philippines, will enter the University of Indiana this autumn. On Saturday, she and her mother will return to Indianapolis and will be there together most of the time until college opens. Mrs. McNutt expects to be back in Washington the latter part of September.

Those few points settled, talk yesterday turned into other channels; and while the lady in question declined to discuss politics, she did have something to say about being a politician's wife.

"You never can put your roots down and feel you are anywhere permanently," she said. "But it's all tremendously interesting; particularly if you like people as much as I do."

Time turned back 20 years when I asked her where she met the man who was to be her husband. It was down in Texas in 1917. He was Maj. McNutt then, and she was Kathleen Timolat, attending a finishing school in San Antonio. They were married in 1918, a few months before the armistice was signed.

To Be Feted By the Sayres

Friends she made back in those days are still her friends, and many of them are now living in Washington. So while she is here she will be feted as often as her schedule permits. Yesterday she and her daughter were luncheon guests of Mrs. William C. Rose and Mrs. Edmund W. Sterling.

Tomorrow evening, both Mr. and Mrs. McNutt will be dinner guests of the newly appointed High Commissioner of the Philippines, Francis B. Sayre, and Mrs. Sayre. And won't that foursome have plenty to talk about?

Photographed On Arrival

Underwood & Underwood.

Mrs. Paul V. McNutt is probably used to having a camera pointed in her direction. Anyway, when she arrived yesterday, on her first trip to Washington since her husband was appointed Federal security administrator, she found one focused on her. She and her daughter, Miss Louise McNutt, will be here until Saturday

Gen. Trujillo Again Feted By Capital

Dominican Leader Plans Whirlwind Finish to Trip Here

Gen. Rafael L. Trujillo, former President of the Dominican Republic, has had a crowded schedule since his return to Washington from New York Tuesday, and today will give a whirlwind wind-up to his second visit to the Capital.

Today, Ecuadorean Ambassador Alfaro will entertain at luncheon for Gen. Trujillo. It will be an informal affair at the Ambassador's apartment in the Mayflower Hotel.

The Dominican Minister, Andres Pastoriza, and Mme. Pastoriza, will give a reception at the Legation this afternoon after which Gen. Trujillo will return to New York.

Lundeens Fete The Visitor

Yesterday afternoon, Senator and Mrs. Ernest Lundeen entertained at their home on Twenty-ninth street at an informal reception in Gen. Trujillo's honor. Between 60 and 65 guests were invited. The Lundeens were guests of Gen. Trujillo in Santo Domingo a year ago.

Last July, a Congressional group made an official trip to Santo Domingo and were entertained by Gen. Trujillo. They spent some time on his yacht, the Ramfis, named for Trujillo's son, and were guests at the Trujillo ranch, Fundacion.

Two Receptions In One Day

Among the guests at the Lundeen party were other members of the Congressional trip, including Senator David I. Walsh, Senator Theodore F. Green, Senator Rush Dew Holt, and Representative Mathew J. Merritt.

Because of the rushed schedule, Gen. Trujillo was feted at two receptions yesterday afternoon, all in the time generally taken for one party. From 5 to 6, he was guest of honor at Senator and Mrs. Lundeen's, and from 6 to 7 was the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Benton, who entertained at their home on Reservoir road.

Anne McNair Becomes Bride

Miss Anne Eleanor McNair, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Anne McNair and the late George McNair, last evening became the bride of J. B. Norman Armstrong, son of Mrs. Charles Armstrong and the late Mr. Armstrong, of Bay Minette, Ala. The Rev. Paul Hutton officiated at the 7:30 ceremony, which took place in the rectory of the Nativity Church.

The bride was gowned in a black and white lace redingote and her flowers were white roses and lilies of the valley. Her maid of honor and only attendant was Miss Mary Looney, who wore black chiffon and whose flowers were red roses and lilies of the valley. William Sullivan was the best man.

After the ceremony there was a small reception at the home of the bride's mother. The latter was gowned in navy blue and wore a corsage of red and white roses. When the couple left for their wedding trip to New York, the bride was wearing a chartreuse and navy blue costume and a corsage of yellow roses. They will make their home in Washington. The bride was educated at Our Lady of Angels Academy and St. Mary's in Clinton, Iowa.

Boyds Reach Mexico City With Triplets

Father, Mother and Elder Sister Are With Three Famous Girls

From Mexico City comes news to Mrs. Rolfe Bolling, sister-in-law of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, that three of her grandchildren, the famous Boyd triplets, accompanied by their sister and parents, have reached that city on their round about motor trip to the West Coast.

Dr. J. E. Boyd, accompanied by Mrs. Boyd (the former Miss Elizabeth Bolling), their eldest daughter, Miss Lola E. Boyd, and the triplets, Mildred, Elena and Edith Boyd, left Washington by motor some time ago, following the end of the school term at Gunston Hall. The latter is the same school from which Mrs. Boyd was graduated, and Dr. and Mrs. Boyd have been making their home in Washington so that their daughters could finish at Gunston.

Their home is in Panama, but for the past two years they have been in the United States. Year before last the Boyds made their home in Pasadena, and the triplets took special courses in dancing in Hollywood. They are now on their way back to California, where they will remain for some time, but will spend about two weeks in Mexico City before proceeding on their journey.

It is not known whether they will have a career in the movies or have made any arrangements to sign a contract, but they are all three beautiful girls, accomplished dancers and had quite a visit with their friend, Eleanor Powell this year (when the latter came to Washington for the President's Birthday Ball), so it is a pretty safe guess that they may "be in pictures" anytime now.

Miss Vogel To Be Guest

Miss Martha Holland Shelton and Miss Frances Addison will entertain at luncheon today at 1:30 at 3302 Rittenhouse street, Chevy Chase, in honor of Miss Julia Vogel, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Clayton B. Vogel.

Miss Vogel will leave Washington for the West Coast with her family Monday. Her father, who is in the United States Marine Corps, will be stationed in San Diego, Calif. Other guests will be Miss Joanne Smith, Miss Rosalyn Buchanan, Miss Elinor Kane, Miss Anne Keebler and Miss Ardath Brown.

The Warners Give Dinner

Dr. and Mrs. Edward P. Warner, who have taken the Jouett Shouse home at 3300 O street for the summer, entertained last evening at a dinner when the ranking guests were the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring.

Other guests were Senator and Mrs. Robert M. La Follette, jr., of Madison, Wis.; Robert H. Hinckley, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, of which Dr. Warner is a member on the National Advisory Committee; Miss Mary LaDame, Special Assistant to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, and Commander and Mrs. Charles A. Mr. Goldman is a graduate of Williams College, of Williamstown, Mass., and of Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, the Williams Club and the Harvard Club of New York.

Miss Shirley Quesada Wed To Roy C. Meinzer, of Norfolk

Rev. Mr. Coyle Officiates at Ceremony at Sherwood Presbyterian Church; Miss Helen Sherwood Serves as Maid of Honor

At a candlelight ceremony last night, at the Sherwood Presbyterian Church, Miss Shirley Dorothy Quesada, daughter of Mrs. Irving G. Quesada and the late Mr. Quesada, became the bride of Roy Crawford Meinzer, of Norfolk, Va., son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar E. Meinzer, of Washington. The Rev. Thomas Law Coyle officiated at the 8 o'clock ceremony.

Given in marriage by her mother, the bride wore a white silk lace redingote over taffeta, fashioned with a very full skirt. She carried a shower bouquet of pale pink and white roses with lilies of the valley and Bovardia.

Miss Helen L. Sherwood was the maid of honor and the only bridal attendant. She wore a gown of shell-pink mousseline de soie edged with ruching, and carried an old-fashioned bouquet edged in lace of flowers in shades of soft blue.

David Mitchell was the best man and the ushers were Kieth Lawson, Ray Putman, Richard Lynt and James Hall, all of Washington.

Following the ceremony, there was a reception at the home of the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Vieth. The mother of the bride wore a soft print frock in heliotrope tones and a corsage of orchids. The bridegroom's mother was gowned in a dark chiffon print.

Assisting at the reception were Miss Norma Chipman, Miss Olivia McCall, Miss Shirley Byers and Miss Ruth Mitchell, all of whom were gowned in full floor-length summer frocks.

When the couple left for their wedding journey the bride was wearing a traveling costume of dark blue sheer with a large navy felt hat with a corsage of sweetheart roses. The couple will make their home in Norfolk.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Boomhour, of Raleigh, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Magruden, of Annapolis, with the latter's son and daughter, William Vieth and Miss Barbara Vieth, cousins of the bride.

The bride attended Wilson Teachers' College. Mr. Meinzer was graduated from the University of Maryland.

55 New Members Are Brought to Party At the Home of Mrs. I. S. Turover

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor

Membership in the Washington Chapter of Hadassah, women's Zionist organization, reached 1,300 yesterday with the "proceeds" of the member-bring-a-member luncheon at the home of Mrs. I. S. Turover, 3909 Jocelyn street. The price of admission was a new member for the organization and 55 came with their sponsors.

The luncheon was provided by Mrs. Turover and a committee of hostesses headed by Mrs. Morris Eanet, Mrs. Joseph Dessoff and Mrs. David Kushner. The affair was the first since Mrs. Moe Offenberg assumed her duties as president succeeding Mrs. Raphael Tourover. She spoke briefly following the luncheon, welcoming the new members and calling attention to the ever-broadening scope of the local chapter's work.

Party in Garden Despite Rain

Rain which threatened in the morning to make a house party instead of a garden party cleared in time permit use of the garden. The members and guests ate luncheon and played mah jongg and bridge afterwards both on the veranda and beneath the shade of trees and large umbrellas on the grounds.

A similar party will be given in the form of a supper next Tuesday night by members of the business and professional group of the Hadassah at the home of Mrs. Charles Olinsky, at 6 p. m.

New members who were guests at yesterday's luncheon were: Mrs. Edward Sonneborn, Mrs. A. Cohen, Mrs. C. H. Williamowsky, Mrs. Joseph Fromberg, Mrs. Harry Shapiro, Mrs. George Wise, Mrs. L. Girls' Camps To Continue

The Six Girl Scout Day Camps, now in full swing, will continue until August 5 under the general direction of Miss Mary Helen Cattell, supervisor.

The girls, from those of teen age to the little Brownies, who are in charge of Mrs. Chester Miller at Fort Kemble Park, Foxhall road, have been carrying on a varied program of activities. Each group is given wide choice in following its special interests.

There have been lessons in outdoor cooking, with the food providing luncheon menus. The girls have been taken on visits to places of interest in and around Washington. They have gone on exploring and hiking trips, combining nature study with exercise; have had periods devoted to folk dancing, singing, sketching, basketry, blueprinting and the planning of overnight camping trips.

Mrs. J. A. Reed is craft supervisor, Mrs. W. M. Kiplinger, chairman of the day camp committee, and Mrs. Henry Matchett, vice chairman.

The camps this year are at Fort Dupont, on Anacostia road, Tuesdays and Wednesdays they are in charge of Mrs. Hazel Walker; Fort Kemble Park, Wednesdays for the Brownies and Wednesdays and Thursdays for the other girls, who are in charge of Mrs. Roland Todd; Rock Creek Park at Sixteenth and Kennedy, Mondays and Tuesdays, with Mrs. John Butcher, director; Fort Bunker Hill, Thirteenth and Perry streets northeast, Tuesdays and Wednesdays, under Mrs. Jesse Lutton's direction, and for colored children at Fort Mahan, on Bennings road, Tuesdays and Fridays, directed by Alyce Hill. Last Thursday, 50 Curley Club members gathered at Our Lady of Victory Parish, where the Rev. Francis J. Kelly, spiritual director of the club, is assistant pastor, for a fried chicken dinner and an entertainment program. The monthly meeting of the executive committee was held at the rectory following the dinner, with Roland J. Hyland, vice president, presiding.

Illinois Society Plans Next Year's Program

Members of the Illinois State Society who do not care to dance will have just as good a time as those who do at the monthly parties next season. Representative Arnold, the president, has announced that a get-acquainted period will precede each regular dance. It also is planned to have a dinner instead of a dance as a welcome to the State Congressional delegation.

The parties will be held the third weeks of November, February, March and April. The Congressional reception, the third week in January, will feature a prominent Illinois official, possibly Gov. Horner if his health is sufficiently improved, according to present plans.

Mary Chace Returns From Trip Through Scandinavian Nations, I. C. C. Convention

MARY LOUISE CHACE, chairman of juniors for the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women, has returned from a trip through Scandinavia and attendance as a guest at the International Chamber of Commerce in Copenhagen.

More than 1,500 persons—delegates and guests—were there for the C. of C. sessions, and festivities, she says. The latter included a garden party at Fredenburg, summer castle of the royal family, where they were received by their majesties, the King and Queen, and the Crown Prince and Princess. From there the visitors went to Elsinore, the castle, in which the story of Hamlet is laid.

The convention sessions were interpreted in English, Danish, French and German, says Miss Chace.

From Copenhagen, she went through the lake region of Sweden, to Stockholm, Helsingsfors, and through the fjords of Norway, which are indescribably beautiful, she says.

She has arrived home in time to help with arrangements for the July meeting of the juniors, which will be a dinner bridge at the clubhouse Monday night—the first time the club has been opened since repairs were begun early in the summer.

AND while we're on vacations—that is to say, while we're on the subject of them—Elizabeth Haney, general secretary of the Y. W. C. A., has just returned from a three-week visit in Michigan.

Mary Louise Danforth, membership secretary, and Mary Putnam, assistant in the business and professional women's department, leave next Thursday for a motor trip to New England and the Gaspe Peninsula. Catherine Jones, secretary in the administration office, and Mildred Chapin, assistant in the Girl Reserve department, motored to Lake Eli, Vt., where they are at Camp Lochearn, which is directed by Miss Edith Reiger, who heads the business and professional women's department of the "Y. W." during the winter season.

Peggy Graves, assistant in the Girl Reserve Department, leaves the first of the week for California; Elizabeth Crouse, food service executive, is at Bailey Island, Me., and Mrs. Albert Putney, of the information service, is in Chicago with her mother.

ALPHA PROVINCE of Chi Sigma Sorority will be hostess to the 1940 national convention in Washington. U.S. Denounces 1911 Treaty With Tokyo come to the conclusion that the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between the United States and Japan which was signed at Washington on February 21, 1911, contains provisions which need new consideration. Toward preparing the way for such consideration and with a view to better safeguarding and promoting American interests as new developments may require, the Government of the United States, acting in accordance with the procedure prescribed in Article XVII of the treaty under reference, gives notice hereby of its desire that this treaty be terminated, and, having thus given notice, will expect the treaty, together with its accompanying protocol, to expire six months from this date.

Way Cleared to Lay Embargo on Supplies For War in China

"Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

"CORDELL HULL."

Pittman Lauds Action

Chairman Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said he thought the State Department action was "wise and justified." He said his own personal opinion was that the State Department was free to proceed without the six months' notice served on Japan, but some other committeemen differed on the legal question involved.

"When one government is conforming to the requirements of amity under one treaty, and that other government (Japan) is not conforming with the requirements of another treaty (the Nine Power pact), the situation is entirely inconsistent," said Pittman.

The Foreign Relations chairman said all legal controversies now raised as to treaty violation by the United States in abrogating the 1911 amity agreement would be eliminated by the State Department notice.

"I believe every member of the Foreign Relations Committee would favor an embargo were it not for that legal question," said Pittman. "Because of that controversy, it was apparent to the Secretary of State that no action would be taken by Congress until next session."

Senate Majority Leader Barkley said he had no comment to make on the State Department action, other than to say it meant the whole question of embargo action would go over until the next session of Congress.

Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, another member of the Foreign Relations Committee, predicted that news of the Hull note would be "enthusiastically received by the American people."

"I would go much further and say I don't think we needed to give notice of abrogation in view of Japan's flagrant and diabolical violation of the Nine-Power Treaty."

While the note referred to a study of other treaties being made with a view to determining whether changes are required, there has been no discussion of abrogating any other commercial pacts.

The action of this Government was immediately received as in marked contrast with that of Great Britain, whose agreement with Japan, announced Tuesday, had led to talk of a "Far East Munich."

Hull's action was in line with the steadily stiffening attitude the American Government has taken recently toward continual Japanese assaults on Americans in China and continued restrictions on American trade in the Japanese-occupied portions of China.

Treaty Prevents Embargo

The treaty now stands squarely in the way of an often-proposed embargo on American supplies on which Japan is greatly dependent in prosecution of her undeclared warfare on China.

Article 5 of the treaty provides that:

"Nor shall any prohibition be imposed by either country on the importation or exportation of any article from or to the territories of the other which shall not equally extend to the like article imported from or exported to any other country."

Under this provision the United States, in order to embargo any supplies to Japan, would also be required to bar shipment of the same articles to all other countries.

Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has a measure pending before his committee now for such an embargo. However, the committee requested an opinion from the State Department on whether such a measure would violate any treaties of the United States. Secretary Hull, cognizant of the fact that the committee had just voted to delay until next session consideration of the Administration's neutrality proposals, replied that since there was an inclination to postpone consideration of related subjects, he suggested that he delay voicing his opinion.

Consequently, word of the Executive Department's action in denouncing the treaty came as even more of a surprise on Capitol Hill.

Use of American supplies in the Far Eastern war has long been a cause for contention in this country.

Pointing to tremendous increases in Japanese purchases of American scrap iron and steel for use in manufacturing munitions, members of Congress have declared that in case of hostilities between this country and Japan American soldiers might be killed by shells made from such American supplies.

Principal exports from the United States to Japan for war purposes, aside from iron and steel, are cotton, aircraft petroleum, and copper but the Pittman resolution calls also for an embargo on agricultural products.

Japan's imports of scrap metal from all countries in 1936, the last year for which Japan has made figures available, amounted to 1,467,639 tons. Yet this country alone supplied Japan with 1,904,768 tons in 1937 and 1,381,901 tons in 1938. Exports in the first three months of this year to 926,450 tons.

Similar dependence on American petroleum is shown. In 1936 Japan imported 33,321,000 barrels from all sources, while in 1938 she imported 21,063,000 barrels from the United States alone.

It has generally been agreed, despite Tokyo's claims of increasing self-sufficiency, that an American embargo on such materials might well cause her military campaign in China to collapse.

Impression Hoped for

While the question of whether placing such an embargo would constitute a hostile act—even an act of war—has been long debated, there was evident hope last night that the notice of treaty abrogation would have the effect of impressing sharply on Japanese officials the fact that this country is now in position to do more than continue its months-long series of protests against Japanese infringements on American rights in the Far East.

No such embargo could be placed until six months hence. In the meanwhile officials are hopeful that there will be a noticeable change in the policies of Japanese Army officials, now dominant in the Tokyo Government.

Years of Strain

Last night's unexpected action, with its admittedly serious implications and the possibility of Japanese retaliation, comes as a climax to years of difficult relations between the two countries.

The Manchukuo campaign, by which Japan set up a puppet state in conquered Chinese territory, and the present widespread and disastrous drive to create a "new order" in Asia, with Tokyo dominating the whole, has forced the American Government to the stand that Japan has been a violator of both the Nine-Power treaty guaranteeing the integrity of China, and the Kellogg-Briand treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy.

Japan has served notice that in the "new order" she intends to create in Asia, this and other countries shall enjoy rights in the Far East only to the extent that they do not conflict with interests of the Japanese.

The United States has emphatically refused to accept such a situation and only as recently as Tuesday Secretary Hull, commenting on the British-Japanese agreement, declared there had been no change in this country's attitude and policy.

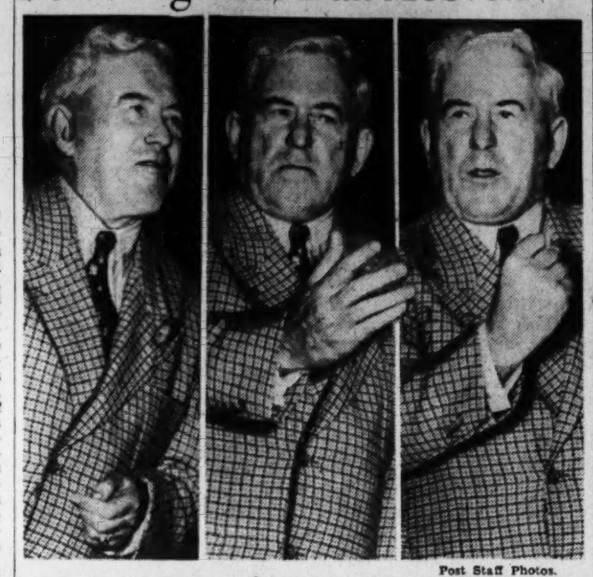
District Lions Whoop It Up For Dangerous Dan McGrew



Post Staff Photos.

Mike Mahoney reciting the Shooting of Dan McGrew: "A bunch of the boys were whooping it up in the Malamute saloon . . . Back of the bar in a solo game, sat Dangerous Dan McGrew . . . One of you is a hound from hell and that one is Dan McGrew . . ."

Back in the bar, in a solo game,
Sat Dangerous Dan McGrew.
And watching his luck was his light o' love,
The lady that's known as Lou.

Big Mike Mahoney, who was there the night McGrew got his in a Dawson City saloon, ripped into that famous ballad by Robert W. Service yesterday in a den of District Lions.

Big Mike—though his mother called him Michael Ambrose—came to town to do his stuff for the Washington Lions Club (he is a past president of the Ottawa Chapter).

A veteran of 18 years in the Klondike and Alaska, personal friend of Service, he made a big enough fortune in gold to retire in 1914, according to his own confession. The 62-year-old former sourdough, not only recited the ballad, but told what led up to the gunplay in that Dawson gambling hall 34 years ago.

"Oh, yes; the shooting of Dan McGrew not only was a fact, but was the result of a true grievance," averred Mahoney, a 6-foot-2 210-pounder.

Big Mike, facing several hundred expectant Lions and guests in the Hotel Mayflower's Italian Garden, lapsed casually from prose into verse as he told the story.

In an interview, he described Dan McGrew as "the biggest, toughest man who ever lived," a towering gent who had slain at least ten men before he was plugged.

"He was in his 40s, I'd say, and a crack shot with either hand," Mahoney declared. "You wouldn't call him handsome, but Lou sure fell for him. I was there, alongside Service, when the three of them fell, McGrew and Madden (her husband), dead, and Lou with two bullets in her neck."

"Y' know, I think Lou was shot trying to shield Madden, though I saw her wink a warning to Dan a few minuts before the stranger whirled from the piano and began firing."

Madden was truly a soulful pianist, said Mahoney, just as Service described him. It was by his beautiful playing the bedraggled stranger was recognized by Lou, he thinks.

As an encore, Mahoney recited "The Cremation of Sam McGee," a travesty by Service.

Assistant Secretary Sayre Named Philippine Commissioner

Assistant Secretary of State Francis Bowes Sayre, who at different times has been a cowpuncher, penologist, and professor of law at Harvard University, yesterday was appointed United States High Commissioner to the Philippines.

He succeeds Paul V. McNutt, former Governor of Indiana, who now is Federal Security Administrator.

Speedy Senate confirmation of Sayre's nomination is expected.

The appointment is a departure from the traditional policy of naming to the Philippines post men who have distinguished themselves in party politics. Sayre, who in 1913 married a daughter of Woodrow Wilson, has not been active in politics.

He has had extensive experience, however, in Oriental affairs. He was named chairman of the interdepartmental committee on Philippine affairs in 1935, and was acting chairman in 1937 of the joint preparatory committee which worked out a plan for reduction of preferential tarriffs on Philippine products on a more gradual basis than that provided in the Philippine independence act.

As an exponent of the gradual elimination of economic ties between the Philippines and the United States, Sayre has exerted considerable influence on Administration policy relating to the islands.

Burke Welcomes Governor's Entry For Senate Seat

By the Associated Press.

Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, said yesterday he welcomed Gov. R. L. Cochran as an opponent in the 1940 Nebraska Democratic senatorial campaign.

"He has been a good Governor," Burke said. "He will offer serious competition, for he is more or less of a New Dealer. It should be an interesting campaign."

Burke has opposed the Administration on its court reorganization plan, the national labor relations act and some other major policies.

Berlin Clears Streets While 'Bombs' Drop

Thoroughfares Vacant A Minute After 'Air Raid' Warning

By the Associated Press

Berlin, July 26.—High flying "enemy warplanes," subected this Nazi capital to a bombing attack tonight which theoretically wiped out hundreds of buildings, broke water mains in dozens of streets, put the city in darkness, and sent Berlin's millions into air raid shelters in realistic defense exercises.

The first alarm in the five-day air raid defense test came at 6:50 p. m. (12:50 p. m., E.S.T.). A minute later the streets, except for an occasional policeman, were empty.

Four hours earlier a warning had been broadcast that "enemy" planes had entered German territory. Thousands of men in Berlin then went into action. Anti-aircraft guns were mounted on buildings. Volunteer workers hurried to their places.

The first "bomb" fell in Berlin's east side in Frankfurter Allee. It tore a figurative hole in the street beside a subway entrance, "killing" five persons and three animals. A large department store and apartment buildings caught fire, but the "fires" were extinguished by persons in the buildings.

The nine enemy planes which arrived over the city dropped hundreds of bombs, referees of the exercises reported.

Volunteer stretcher bearers carried the "injured" into first aid stations and bandaged their sound arms and legs.

While the planes were over the city—a matter of about an hour—street cars and buses stood empty, their passengers and crews huddling in cellars.

Officials would not estimate the number of "killed and wounded," but hundreds of black flags marked buildings struck by bombs and other hundreds of black ropes marked off the places in streets hit by the blasts.

Here and there a citizen who delayed taking shelter was rushed into a refuge by police, but authorities indicated they were pleased by the performance.

Russian Pact Signing Near

missions to the Soviet capital to work out the strategy of the "next war," and elaborate the terms of a three-power military convention, hopes were increased in Soviet as well as in British quarters that the alliance will become a concrete fact in the near future.

The hesitancy hitherto of London to agree to Moscow's proposal that "staff talks" should begin forthwith, even though the alliance proper was hanging fire, had served as one of the serious obstacles to the alliance negotiations. A spokesman at the Soviet Embassy said today that the Soviets were highly encouraged by the military mission development, since this was a manifest that now the British "mean business."

The staff talks are to begin almost immediately. A French military mission will be going shortly to Moscow, headed by Gen. Doumenc, commander of an army corps at Lille, and a member of the French Superior War Council. The British mission will be led probably by Gen. Sir Edmund Ironside. As this officer was recently in Warsaw engaged in talks with Polish army leaders, it is expected that he will be particularly useful in discussing the delicate subject of military co-operation between Soviet Russia and Poland, in the event of a Nazi move in Danzig.

The "staff talks" specter looms especially large in the Soviet mind since Paris saw reasons for not entering into them following the ratification in 1936 of the Franco-Soviet mutual aid pact. The position maintained by the French government was always resented by Moscow.

Though Prime Minister Chamberlain maintained a strict reserve in a brief statement on the subject today in Commons, his audience detected in his words grounds for the belief that the next few days might bring significant developments.

"I hope to be in a position to make a statement early next week," Chamberlain said, adding that "we have not yet heard" of Soviet reaction.

The reticence of the prime minister threw a veil over the facts. The Soviet embassy considers the arrangements for a tri-party military conference in Moscow as good as concluded.

In the lobbies of the House of Commons tonight there were confident predictions that the statement which Chamberlain will make next week will be of the first importance.

Franco Drops Plan to Make Brother-in-Law Premier as Generals Object, French Hear

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France (at the Spanish Frontier), July 26.—Gen. Franco was reported today to have bowed to bitter opposition to his brother-in-law, Ramon Serrano Suner, chief advocate of close Spanish collaboration with Italy and Germany.

Reports said Franco, surprised by violent attacks on Serrano Suner and his Italian connections, had pigeon-holed a plan to make him premier with almost unlimited power. He is now minister of the interior.

Monarchists Fight Him

The attacks were said to have come from monarchists, who oppose Serrano Suner's Falangists (Fascists), from leaders of the old army and even from quarters close to the generalissimo.

There was speculation that if Serrano Suner should fall from grace, Premier Mussolini might decline or delay replying to an invitation from Franco to visit Spain next fall.

Advices crossing the frontier said Gen. Jose Moscardo, defender of the Alcazar, and Gen. Antonio Aranda, hero of Oviedo, had joined the growing opposition.

Gens. Gonzalo Queipo de Llano, Juan Yague and Jose Solchaga have already openly opposed Serrano Suner.

Generals Want Neutrality

All were said to have warned Franco that if he elevated his brother-in-law, he would no longer be able to keep order.

Queipo de Llano, speaking for the wartime generals of whom only three have retained their posts in the shakeup of recent days, was said to have declared the army insists upon adherence to its slogan, "Spain for Spaniards," and wants the country to remain neutral and to cut away from the dictatorships before it is embroiled in a European war on the side of Germany and Italy.

These generals were reported convinced that Spain, bleeding and torn from 1,000 days of civil war, cannot fight another major conflict and could not hold off the French army in the Pyrenees and Morocco army with Italo-German aid.

Japanese Mass Force in Mongolia

By the United Press.

Tokyo, Thursday, July 27 (U.P.).—Japan put her Manchukuoan protectorate on a full war basis today, massed more warships off Russian Sakhalin and threw fresh mechanized divisions against Soviet forces on the Manchu-Mongol border, where it was claimed that more than 700 Russian planes have been shot down in two and one-half months of fighting.

There was every indication Tokyo feared Moscow was increasing its military aid to Nationalist China as a result of the Anglo-Japanese accord.

In Hsinking, the Japanese-controlled Manchu government invoked its war-time "supreme defense act," which mobilizes every resource of the 34,000,000 inhabitants of the former Chinese Manchurian provinces.

James Edward Gibson, of Arlington County, was arraigned yesterday afternoon before United States Commissioner John W. Monroe on a charge of violating the Mann act. He pleaded not guilty, and was placed under $10,000 bond to await the session of the United States Court in December. In default of bail, Gibson was placed in the Alexandria City Jail, and will be taken to Richmond within a few days.

Gibson was brought before Judge Robert N. Pollard, of the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, Monday on a charge of rape, but Judge Pollard decided his court was without jurisdiction in the case.

United States Attorney Sterling Hutchison noted an appeal to the United States Supreme Court on Pollard's ruling that the Federal Government could not prosecute in a capital offense occurring in an area where the State shared control. The Government charged the alleged offense took place on the George Washington Memorial boulevard between the Memorial and Key bridges.

Robins. The reception committee which will meet the Governor includes Elliott F. Hoffman, Walter DuBois Brookings, Francis H. Fannon, Chester G. Pierce, Ray C. Brehaut and David C. Book.

Mrs. Cora Jackson Stover, widow of John T. Stover, died yesterday morning at her home, 617 North Columbus street, after a long illness. She was a nurse.

Mrs. Stover is survived by one son, Frank B. Stover, manager of the theaters of the Alexandria Amusement Co., and two grandsons.

The funeral will be held at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon from the Wheatley funeral home, 809 King street, conducted by the Rev. Ryland T. Dodge, pastor of the Temple Baptist Church. Burial will be in Bethel Cemetery, Alexandria.

Lampson Heads Citizens Bank In Takoma Park

Lawrence V. Lampson, 1214 Floral street northwest, has been elected president of the Citizens Bank of Takoma Park, it was announced yesterday. Lampson succeeds Eben M. Whitcomb, of Silver Spring, Md.

A Takoma Park insurance broker, Lampson has been associated with the Citizens Bank since its organization in 1923, serving as its vice president for many years. He is a former member of the faculty of Central High School and pact president of the alumni association. He belongs to the Takoma Park Lions Club and the Takoma Lodge, F. A. A. M.

The board of directors announced the resources of the bank had increased over $1,000,000 in the last five years, the total resources as of June 30 amounting to $1,222,000. During the last six months the bank has paid stockholders dividends totaling 3 per cent.

Children Examined

Dr. Ralph G. Beachley, Arlington County Va., health officer, yesterday reported 43 children under 16 were examined by Dr. D. M. Faulkner, of Richmond, at the special orthopedic clinic at the Clarendon Health Center. The majority of the children were found to have foot and posture defects.

Homer Thomas Replies

Homer Randolph Thomas, his opponent, said:

"It has always been my idea that a judge's task is one of listening and not of speaking. In a campaign for a judicial office I cannot see how there can be any issue save the qualifications of the candidates themselves," he said.

He pointed out that he was 35 years old and a native of Arlington County, and had practiced law since 1927, having an office in the courthouse all the time.

"Much has been said of juvenile delinquency and juvenile crime in Arlington County, which has served to exaggerate in the minds of the public something of which there is really very little. I am the father of four boys, which, I believe, qualifies me to dispose of juvenile cases in a fatherly manner," he said.

Poultrymen Hear O'Conor Laud Work

Chicken Raisers Set Example for All in College Park Feast

Poultry raisers from Maryland and from 39 foreign countries yesterday set an example they would like all others to follow—a feast on fried chicken at poultry day exercises at College Park.

The fried chicken a la Maryland buffet lunch was held on the University of Maryland campus following dedication of a $250,000 poultry building and plant.

With an eye on crispy morsels of young chicken, Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor, who delivered the principal address, rendered praise to "those who are giving their lives" to research and study in the field of poultry raising.

German Translation

His address was translated into German, language of science, for benefit of the more than 125 representatives of foreign nations, who will attend the World's Poultry Congress, opening in Cleveland, Ohio, today.

Dr. Thomas P. Symons, director of the extension service at the university, said the poultry business was the second largest money-making farm industry in the State. The revenue last year, he said, was $18,000,000 or, $2,000,000 lower than income from milk and dairy products. In the "broiler" phase of the poultry industry, Dr. Symons declared Maryland was first in the country.

Dr. Symons praised the work of the Livestock Sanitary Service, headed by Dr. Mark Welsh, for reducing disease.

"Twenty years ago," he declared, "27 per cent of the chickens in the State were disease-infected. Now that figure has been reduced to less than 7 per cent."

Canadian Speaker

Fred C. Elford, poultry commissioner of Canada, said he believed money spent in poultry research work was one of the best investments any country or State could make. A friend, he said, told him after visiting the prairie provinces of western Canada, that he had never seen a farmer have to ask for help who consistently kept 50 hens.

Gas Company Given Right To Buy Others

P. U. C. Approves Plan For Taking Alexandria, Hyattsville Firms

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday approved a petition of the Washington Gas Light Co., to acquire all securities of the Alexandria and Hyattsville gas companies from the Washington & Suburban Co., for $1,050,000, to be paid by the issuance of 35,000 shares of common stock.

The Washington & Suburban Co., a Massachusetts common-law trust, which controls not only the local company but the nearby utilities, must pay for the issuance and registration of the stock.

The local firm has been operating the Alexandria and Hyattsville plants for several years, but under the new commission order, now has control of the entire suburban gas market. The Washington firm already owned the gas utilities of Rosslyn, Va., and Montgomery County, Md.

Glebe Road Zone Change Favored

The Arlington County zoning appeal board, meeting yesterday at the courthouse, voted to recommend to the county board rezoning property at 638 North Glebe road, from residential A to local business, as applied for by H. E. Bitting and Anna Livingstone.

The application of H. Herfurth for a rezoning of Blocks B, D, E, F and G, in Arna Valley, from residential A to B, was approved. Another application approved by the board was that of B. M. Smith for a rezoning of the north side of the 2500 block of Columbia bike, from residential A to general business.

Harry Saffell Speaks

The next speaker, Harry C. Saffell, candidate for one of the five seats on the county board, said he favored maintaining Lee boulevard as a residential section, more sidewalks and a reduction in both gas and electric rates.

In adopting recommendations for a revision of its by-laws, the group voted to change the term of all officers from one to two years, and to hold seven meetings a year, instead of five.

Arlington Man Named to State Welfare Board

F. L. Ball Appointed; Judge Strode's Wife Also Gets Term

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., July 26.—Gov. Price appointed former Senator Frank L. Ball, O. Arlington and Mrs. Aubrey E. Strode, of Lynchburg, today to the State Board of Public Welfare to fill the unexpired terms of Horace M. Fox, of Roanoke, and Dr. Belle Boone Beard, of Sweet Briar, resigned.

Ball's term will run until June 30, 1940, and Mrs. Strode's until June 30, 1941.

Fox, first chairman of the new board created last year in connection with the State's expanded relief program, resigned recently because of the press of other business. Dr. Beard resigned to accept a position in the department of public welfare.

Ball is an Arlington lawyer. Mrs. Strode is the wife of Judge Aubrey E. Strode, of the Lynchburg Corporation Court.

Gov. Price also named Frederick Charles Disque, of the University of Virginia, to succeed himself on the Virginia Art Commission for a term of four years from June 18.

Plainclothes Police Has Uniform Cost

What is the official uniform of a plainclothes policeman?

When Sergt. James S. McAuliffe, assigned to plainclothes duty, submitted a bill for $7.15 for a pair of shoes, the Montgomery county commissioners went into a huddle. Uniformed police are allowed expenses for their official uniforms and equipment. But, what about a plainclothes man?

Finally, it was decided to lay the question before the board's counsel, Joseph and Vivian Simpson. The law firm of Simpson & Simpson yesterday returned a ruling that the shoes were part of Sergt. McAuliffe's official uniform if approved by Police Chief Charles M. Orme.

Chief Orme indorsed the expense and Sergt. McAuliffe was reimbused for the brogans.

Martin Publicity Chairman

The fourth outdoor concert of the season will be given August 9 on the lawn of the Presbyterian Church on Broad street. The 40-piece band will be augmented to 60 pieces by members of the United States Marine Band and there will be special vocal and instrumental solos. Women Hear Welfare Aide In Arlington

Mrs. Dunn Addresses Organized Voters; Candidates Speak At Lyon Park Session

Clarendon, Va. Tel. OXford 0509.

Mrs. Dorothy Dunn, secretary to the county welfare board, told the Organized Women Voters of Arlington County yesterday at Lyon Park Community House that nothing had been done so far to bring the board back into the District of Columbia Community Chest. Negotiations are still under way, she said, but the board will not reorganize its methods to meet chest requirements.

She pointed out that funds come from Federal, State and county governments to carry on the work in accordance with the social security act, including care of the blind and old age pensions. Funds the county has received in the past from the Community Chest, she said, are used to operate summer camps for children and in providing hot lunches and other items.

Last year, Mrs. Dunn said, the county received from the Community Chest a total of $21,082.89.

59 Private Agencies

In 1921 there were in the District of Columbia 21 social agencies while today there are 59 private agencies, she said.

The Community Chest, Mrs. Dunn stated, was organized in 1928. It does not give funds for cash relief, but rather, according to plans of the Chest, for educational purposes.

The County Welfare Board has not, up to this time, been able to meet the requirements of the Community Chest so that Arlington County may participate this year, Mrs. Dunn said.

George P. Grove, one of two candidates seeking the Democratic nomination next Tuesday for the County judgeship, told the group a judge should have patience and consideration but at the same time be firm.

Cites Law on Substitute

"I am not identified with any group in the county and, if elected, shall be judge and no one shall tell me how to act," he said.

He pointed out that the law provides that there shall be a substitute judge appointed, to serve 30 days.

"I believe that more than 40 per cent of all juvenile cases can be settled in the judge's office. It is absolutely wrong to put a youth 18 years of age or under in jail unless a serious crime has been committed. I believe in preventive measures and most juvenile cases can be settled in the home," he said.

25-Foot Putt Ousts Andy Oliveri at Baltimore

Public Links Hope of D. C. Bows to Gwin On Final Hole

Oklahoma U. Student Wins With Long Putt; Armstrong, Hawaii Star, Tourney Choice

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
By a Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, Md., July 26.—Andrew Oliveri's National Public Links aspirations ended in the eighteenth cup of the Mount Pleasant course here today, when Ted Gwin, a slender slow poke from Tulsa, dropped a 25-foot birdie putt that sent the District champion to the sidelines in the second round. The score was 1 up.

Gwin, 20-year-old University of Oklahoma student, who played so slow the U. S. G. A. officials warned him on the ninth green to speed up or take the consequences, thrilled a home green crowd that had gathered for the finish by lining up the putt in his methodical manner and then slamming the ball in the back of the cup for a beautiful birdie, from 25 feet above the hole.

Oliveri had evened the match on the seventeenth with a spoon shot that was 2 feet short of a hole-in-one, and after trapping his second on the eighteenth, he chipped out of the trap within 2 feet of the pin, apparently a sure halve and an extra hole match. But then Gwin putted and went into the third round where he will meet Utica's Eddie Furgol.

First Win Was Easy

Oliveri, the 21-year-old broad-shouldered youngster from Rock Creek, entered the second round with a front-running first round victory over William Birofka, of Summit, N. J. Andy took advantage of a bad chip shot and two 3-putt greens by his opponent on the first nine to turn 3 up, halved the next five holes and won the match on the sloping fifteenth hole.

As the field was reduced from 64 to 16 in two rounds of match play, Arthur Armstrong, the Hawaiian steamship company clerk, a finalist in 1935, appeared to be the logical favorite to succeed Al Leach as champion. Armstrong, a typical Hawaiian in appearance despite the deceiving name, routed Jude Fordham of St. Paul, 5 and 4, in the first round and then defeated Craton Barrett, Dallas, 2 and 1, with apparently the best golf game in the tournament.

He was the lone co-medalist left however, as Gwin, Oliveri's conqueror, put Luke Barnes, Atlanta, to the sidelines in the first round, 3 and 2, Gerry Bert, jr., the Seattle youngster, lost to Michael Crestone, of Mont Clair, N. J., 2 and 1, in the second round, and Jack Taulman's fame was brief as he went out early, 2 and 1, to last year's finalist, Louis Cyr, of Vancouver, Wash.

Colorful Cop Scores

The San Francisco police scout car driver, big Jim Molinari, who tied Claude Rippy for the medal three years ago, was one of the most colorful golfers left, as he beat Jack Colmar, of Sacramento, 4 and 3, and then won three holes in a row on the back nine from Marshall Springer, 16-year-old Chicagoan, to win, 3 and 2.

There was no love lost in the Molinari-Springer match, which drew the biggest crowd of the day. Springer went to 20 holes to beat a former finalist and favorite, Don Erickson, of Los Angeles' championship team, in the first round.

George Bradley, whose 54 years make him the oldest player in the event, went 21 holes, longest match of the day, to win over Harry Kaufman, Lincoln, Neb., in the first round and after a long rest he followed the entire field in around dusk with one of the hottest rounds of the day and a 4-and-2 victory over Neil Whitney, of Los Angeles.

The first half of the upper bracket virtually was a west-of-the-Rockies affair, with Phillip Gordon, Oakland, and Willard McKay, Long Beach, upholding California's prestige, while Roy Dolce represented Denver, and Ken Peterson, the outsider, was from Dayton, Ohio.

John Krisko, another Dayton player; Molinari, Gwin and Furgol advanced in the other section of the upper bracket. Carl Dezern, a bleached blond from Durham (N. C.) High, just 16 years old; Andy Szwedko, of the Pittsburgh Steel Workers; Bradley, from Philadelphia, and Cyr moved to the third round in the top half of the lower bracket.

Steve Doctor, of Buffalo; Armstrong, Wes Berner, another of the West Coast's large delegation from Portland, Oreg., and Cestone, Bert's conqueror from Montclair, completed the victorious 16.

Gipe Out of Money In Public Links Consolation Play

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Md., July 26.—James Gipe, District entrant in the National Public Links championship, who failed to qualify with a 163 total, finished out of the money in the consolation tournament here today over the Hillsdale course with a 3 over par 75.

Chester Werner, Indianapolis, won the trophy with a 70, while nine others also won prizes donated by a local newspaper, all with scores from 70 to 73.

Whitney's Valedictory Wins English Race

Goodwood, England, July 26 (AP).—J. H. Whitney's Valedictory, a 4-year-old son of Blandford, today won the Goodwood Stakes at 2 miles and 3 furlongs.

Valedictory, quoted at 100 to 9, finished a half length in front of High Rank, at 100 to 6, with Black Speck, 100 to 7, third by a short head. Eighteen ran.

Newsom Triumphs Over Krakauskas, 3-1

Buddy Myer Emphatically Tagged Out by Tebbetts at the Plate

Tigers Rally In 7th, Win Mound Duel

Pitchers Limit Each Club to Six Hits; Travis' Double Play Is Fielding Feature

By Shirley Povich.

Big Buck Newsom, who counts that day well spent when he can beat his old pals, the Nats, enjoyed himself thoroughly yesterday afternoon at Griffith Stadium. Grinning impishly at the boos he encouraged from the 3,000 spectators, he limited the Nats to six hits and turned in a 3-to-1 victory for the Tigers, his eleventh of the season.

He licked Joe Krakauskas in a tight pitching duel. Until he retired for a pinch-hitter in the eighth inning, the left-handed Lithuanian had held the Tigers to five hits, but the lone base on balls he issued and a pair of hits in the seventh inning proved Krakky's undoing.

Budd Myer Hurt

The Tigers came from behind to win for Newsom. For six innings they were stifled with one hit by Krakauskas in a brilliant stretch of scoreless pitching, but in the seventh, after Krakky walked Lead-off Man McCoy, a pair of singles by Higgins and Greenberg, and a long fly by Bell wiped out the Tigers, 1-to-0 deficit and established them in a 2-to-1 lead.

The Nats lost not only the ball game, but Buddy Myer. The veteran second baseman suffered a severely bruised wrist on a slide into the plate in the fifth inning and will be out of the Nats' line-up for several days. X-ray pictures of Myer's injury revealed no fracture.

Krakauskas opened his bid for a fifth straight pitching victory with a flourish when he struck out the three Tigers to face him in the three innings, and from that point until the seventh he settled down to a clever show of pitching, facing only 19 men in the first six innings.

The only hit allowed by Krakky in those six innings was McCoy's hard smash back into the box. When Krakky was in trouble in the sixth, because Lewis fumbled Croucher's grounder with none out, Cecil Travis rescued him with a spectacular double play on McCoskey's grounder. Timing McCoskey's smash perfectly, Travis took the ball while stepping on second base and rifled it to Vernon to complete a brilliant double play.

Beats Out Bunt

Both clubs could stir up only one hit each in the first four innings. Taft Wright's second-inning single was the only blow surrendered by Newsom until Cecil Travis lashed a double down the leftfield line to open the fifth inning, when the Nats broke the scoreless tie.

Buddy Myer followed Travis' blow by beating out a clever bunt to Greenberg, and Mickey Vernon produced a long sacrifice fly to rightfield that ushered Travis home. Newsom was in further trouble when Giuliani followed with a rightfield single that moved Myer to third with one out, but Newsom fogged a third strike past Krakauskas and then saw himself escape the inning when Myer attempted to score from third on a short passed ball, Catcher George Tebbetts retrieving the ball and cutting off Myer at the plate with a diving tag.

In the last four innings the Nats could get to first base against Newsom, but no farther. He held them to two singles after the fifth. They tossed away a scoring chance in

Dudas, Mann Sign for Bout Here Aug. 7

Gould and Braddock Agree to Terms With Ahearn-Turner Forces

Steven Dudas, well known New Jersey heavyweight, was signed yesterday for a ten-round match with Nathan Mann, of New Haven, at Griffith Stadium August 7.

The Turner-Ahearn combine obtained Dudas' signature after negotiation with his new managers, Joe Gould and Jimmy Braddock, former world's heavyweight champion. Matchmaker Ahearn has been combing the heavy ranks for an opponent for Mann since Jim Robinson, the original pick, was knocked out in Baltimore this week.

Mann and Dudas, both of whom claim victories over Bob Pastor, who fights Joe Louis for the title in September, have met twice before—each winning one fight. Ahearn is building up the pending encounter as a "rubber" bout.

Dudas, claiming the heavyweight title of New Jersey, has been an active figure in European rings. He fought Emile Scholz, Max Schmeling, Heinz Lazek and Paul Wallner in Germany. Steve holds victories over Marty Gallagher, Al Ettore and other such fight gentlemen, while Mann, knocked out in the fourth round by Louis last year, is seeking to get back in the ring with the champion.

Dunkelberger Out Of Canadian Play

St. Bruno, Quebec, July 26 (AP).—Dynamite exploded in the second and third rounds of the Canadian amateur golf championship today, leaving the ghosts of the tournament's four strongest favorites on the sun-baked fairways of the Mount Bruno course.

The toll included the elimination of Ross Somerville, of London, Ontaria; Bobby Dunkelberger, of Charlotte, N. C., and the Strafaci brothers, Ralph and Frank, from Brooklyn. The Strafacis didn't even reach the third round.

Henry Martell, of Edmonton, Alberta champion, shot a one-under-par 34 at Dunkelberger on the home nine to eliminate the slight Southerner, 2 up. Doug Saunders, of Charlottetown, a junior, knocked out Ralph Strafaci, 4 and 3, in the morning, only to lose in the afternoon. Ken Lawson, of Vancouver, eliminated Frank Strafaci, 4 and 3, in the morning and then also lost in the third round.

Utah Speed Driver Narrowly Misses Death in Flaming Car

Mechanics Rip Open Cockpit, Rescue Ab Jenkins After Record Attempt

By the Associated Press.

Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, July 26.—Mechanics who ripped open the inclosed cockpit of Ab Jenkins' racing car and dragged out the Utah speed driver, his clothing ablaze, averted a tragic finish today to Jenkins' latest assault on his own 24-hour automobile speed record.

Jenkins suffered burns the full length of his right arm and on the calf of his right leg, but the flames were smothered before they inflicted critical injury.

The driver was treated at an emergency hospital in Salt Lake City, 125 miles east of here.

Quick work with fire extinguishers also limited damage to the car.

The accident occurred near the end of the fourth hour of Jenkins' contemplated 24-hour run. Troubled by a howling motor noise, Jenkins pulled into the pit for a check by Mechanics Bill Oliver and Marvin Jenkins, the latter Ab's 18-year-old son.

The crew failed to discover the cause of difficulty and Jenkins reentered the car.

As the driver started the twin motors of his 6,000-pound Mormon Meteor 3d, overheated gears locked, the car stalled and fire broke out.

Jenkins' clothes had become soaked with gasoline from a leaky hand pump in the cockpit, and caught fire. The driver tried an emergency trapdoor but it would not work. Then Oliver and Marvin Jenkins tore the hood from the cockpit and dragged the elder Jenkins to safety.

Investigation indicated a joint on the Meteor's drive shaft had caused the initial trouble and also had been indirectly responsible for the fire. Mechanics estimated several days would be necessary to make repairs.

Jenkins was seeking to better his present 24-hour record average of 157.27 miles an hour, established in September, 1937.

'Diz' Dean Easily Beats Dodgers, 10-2

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 26.—Dizzy Dean, his cunning once more restored, pitched the Cubs to an easy 10-2 victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers today.

Dean gave up only five hits, struck out four and didn't issue a single base on balls. In the first four innings only one Dodger, Art Parks, reached first, and he got there on Billy Herman's error.

Meanwhile the Cubs, aided by homers from the bats of Gabby Hartnett and Dick Bartell, were mauling Fred Fitzsimmons and Ira Hutchinson for 13 hits.

Snead Places Self In Doctor's Care

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., July 26 (AP).—Slammin' Sammy Snead, forced to cancel a Western golfing trip because of three infected teeth, placed himself today in care of a physician, who expected the long-driving pro would be well again in a few weeks.

Snead said the illness so tired him he could scarcely play more than nine holes.

Tom Sunkel Beats Giants For Cards, 10-0

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, July 26 (AP).—Young Tom Sunkel, a southpaw, came within two hits of a perfect game today as the Cardinals sunk the New York Giants 10 to 0.

Going into the eighth he had a perfect game, but Tom Hafey's clean single spoiled it. Later Billy Jurges singled.

It was the Giants' fifth whitewashing of the year and marked the fourth straight time Harry Gumbert has been defeated. The Cards touched Gumbert and Hal Schumacher for 14 blows.

Sunkel fanned nine batsmen, including Bob Seeds four straight times, in racking up his second major league victory.

And the young southpaw helped along the victory with a single and a double, scoring once and driving in a run.

Gumbert, who started for the Giants, lasted only three innings and Schumacher, who finished, was hit hard, yielding the Cards their last six runs.

Browns Lose, 14-1, as Yanks Tie Run Mark

Dickey Homers Three Times; Champions Tally in Each Inning

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 26.—The champion New York Yankees tied one modern major league mark and almost tied another as they swamped the hapless St. Louis Browns, 14-1, in the second game of their series here today.

The mark they tied was one held by five other clubs of scoring in every inning of a 9-inning game. Of course, the Yankees only came to bat eight times, but some of the other clubs who are co-holders of that mark were up only eight times.

Bill Dickey, the Yanks' great catcher, slapped out three home runs—just one short of the 9-inning record of 4 set by his former roommate, Lou Gehrig.

The Yankees' biggest inning was the fourth when they scored four times.

Meanwhile, the Browns, who also bowed in the first game yesterday, had to wait until the eighth before they could nick Red Ruffing for their lone tally. Ruffing allowed the visitors only 3 hits and never more than one an inning.

Three Browns pitchers were unable to stop the Yankee assault which gave the champions their sixty-fourth win against 25 losses.

Karcher, Justice Join Redskin Grid Ranks

The Washington Redskins 1939 playing personnel yesterday rose to 31 as Coach Ray Flaherty wired local offices that Jim Karcher, guard, and Ed Justice, blocking back, both veterans of three years' service, had submitted their contracts to him in Spokane, Wash.

Instructions to report to the Spokane training quarters in August have been sent to 49 players, Jack Espy, general manager, said, and more contracts are expected daily.

Karcher, who joined the Skins after playing in the All-Star game in Chicago in 1936, is a former Ohio State football star. Ed Justice came to the Skins from Gonzaga University in 1936 also.

A vanguard of 17 men will leave Union Station on the Liberty Limited Wednesday at 5:15 p. m. for the Spokane quarters. Other players will be picked up along the route.

Former Champ Dies

Auckland, New Zealand, July 26 (AP).—Torpedo Billy Murphy, 77, who in 1889 claimed the world featherweight championship, died today.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich.

A stoutish, big-muscled man of 38 will climb into an automobile this evening, press his accelerator foot to the floorboard, turn his car over in a double somersault and step jauntily out of his death-trap unharmed and ready to keep his next engagement at his art.

POVICH

At least he will be unharmed unless Lucky Teter's luck deserts him. He has nosed over 600 cars in his time and only 12 times—only 12—has he been carted away to a hospital. There are enough stitches in his body to string a tennis racket, but Lucky Teter says those happened before he really learned how to drive an automobile.

He's heading his own show at the Capitol Speedway track tonight under the sponsorship of the Northeast Business Men's Association—Lucky Teter's Hell Drivers, he calls 'em, and if you think it's a strange calling, well, there's this consolation: Lucky Teter's income from his art for the past half dozen years has averaged $50,000.

Teter's men crash head-on in a pair of cars traveling toward each other at 40 miles an hour, they ride through blazing plankings on motorcycles and they swing and swerve their sputtering chariots in a death-defying show of man's mastery over machine. But the feature stunt is reserved for Lucky himself. He's the only man he'll trust to nose a car over, make two complete turns and emerge unhurt or at least not too badly injured.

You Must Relax, He Says, to Live

He has one watchword. It's "Relax." When he's head over heels in the driver's seat of his stock car he's as limp as a sack of wheat, he says. "And that's advice for anybody who's about to crash, whether by accident or design," he counsels. "Stay relaxed. Let the car take you where it will. That's your best chance. It's no time to be tense."

When he steps into his car tonight to do his somersault stunt, he will have fasted for at least twelve hours. He's not banking entirely on his luck. Doctors, you see, never like to undertake an emergency operation when the patient has food in his stomach, and there's always the chance that Lucky Teter will be an emergency patient.

Lucky Teter smashes up about 52 cars a year—new cars that he gets from the factory at a discount because of the volume of his purchases and the unavoidable advertising the manufacturer gets from Teter's stunts. Save for reinforced tires, Teter's particular stunting car is a stock model. A mobile garage that is part of Teter's caravan can straighten a sprung frame or piece a battered car together in a few hours.

Teter is the only married man in his outfit. The other 30-odd members of his cast are bachelors, as Lucky insists. He doesn't want men with wives or families risking their necks nightly, he says. As for himself, well, that is apparently different. Pretty Mrs. Teter knew him for what he was when they were married.

No insurance company will insure his troupe against mishap, obviously, but Teter has reckoned on that. He maintains his own reserve fund to care for all injured stunters.

Crashed First Car for $250

You wouldn't credit a fellow who is continually seeking better and more daring ways to turn a car over as a cautious sort of guy, but that is what Lucky Teter is, in a measure, despite his goofy sort of art. He doesn't try a stunt until he has delved into the mathematics of it. He's a student of automobile dynamics and he won't venture on a track until he has satisfied himself as to the calcium content of it. Calcium makes it sticky, and a too-sticky track would mean curtains for Lucky Teter.

He's made a science of the business of crashing cars, but there was nothing very scientific about it when Lucky went into his first crash. He tumbled down a cliff in a pleasure car and lay unconscious for six hours until he somehow recovered and crawled a mile over icy terrain for aid. But apparently it didn't scare him because when he ventured out to an automobile testing ground and saw factory men put new models through a grind, he was struck with an idea.

After watching empty cars pushed down a runway and turned over in order that factory men might view the results, Lucky reasoned that a car's worthiness could be better judged if a driver was in the thing when it turned over. He volunteered to do the job for $250, and it was the beginning of a career.

Stunt-driving isn't his hobby, though. He operates a racing stable of ten horses—hobby horses. There have been lean years for the stable in which his oat-burners cost him more than his gas-burners made for him, but a 4-year-old by the name of Seed, which Danny Meade rode to six wins at Hialeah, is showing a profit for the entire stable.

Next month, Lucky will commute from the Canadian National Fair at Toronto to the New York State Fair at Syracuse daily. He'll turn over a car for the Canadians each afternoon for a week, then hop a plane and turn over a car for Syracuse folks each night. And he thinks it's a wonderful way to make a living.

Ten U. S. Trackmen Embark for Europe

New York, July 26 (AP).—Ten American track athletes sailed on the steamship Manhattan today for a series of international meets in Europe.

They will compete in Scotland, England, Switzerland, Greece and possibly Esthonia and Italy. The program calls for a meet at Glasgow, Scotland, August 5, two days after the team arrives.

The highlight of the trip will be an international meet in London August 7 with Blaine Rideout, of North Texas State Teachers College, national 1,500-meter champion, racing the mile against Sidney Wooderson, of England. On August 13 the team will compete in Zurich, Switzerland, and then in Athens, a few days later.

Bel Air Opening Baffles Bettors As Machines Fail

Scores of would-be bettors couldn't get their cash down at the last minute when the horses were going to the post for the first race. The electric current failed momentarily and the betting machines wouldn't work.

The field got away to tightly jammed start and just when the eight 2-year-olds in their claiming race turned into the head of the stretch, Polly Macdun tossed Jockey D. Scocca high into the air. Scocca wasn't hurt.

Sepiln and Navigation came burning to the wire neck and neck for a photo finish that the judges finally called a dead heat. Their time for the 180 feet more than 4 furlongs was 58 3-5.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, July 26.—Henry Armstrong held out his small, brown hands, closed them into hard little fists and opened them again.

"I found a mud that has done them a lot of good," the intelligent little champion said. "Found it down around Hot Springs. You pack it around your hands and it draws almost like plaster of Paris. It's taken all the soreness out of them, or at least what soreness they didn't take out in London and Paris."

CONSIDINE

Eddie Walker, one of the lightweight and welterweight champion's handlers, looked up at the reporters and said, "Did you hear what happened in Paris? Well, his hands are so sore he can't close them, so Jeff Dickson told us about a frog who was real good on hands.

"Well, we go to the guy and he turns out to be screwy. Yeah, nuts. Anyway he begins giving Henry's hands the business. First he feels them, real gentle-like, and he keeps doing that until it looks like they're playing hands. Then all of a sudden he grabs a real holt on Henry's left hand, gives it a big yank and there's a 'pop!' that you can hear all over the room.

And Then Henry Fainted

"Henry fainted. Yeah. But when he come to his hand is okay. And he could close it again. He hadn't even been able to close it in the Roderick fight."

"That's right," the little flat-nosed fighter recalled. "I took treatments right up to the day of the fight, but my left was still so sore and stiff that it hurt me more to hit Roderick with it than it hurt Roderick to get hit. But I wanted to hit him just the same, so I slugged him with my left wrist."

A couple of the reporters stopped taking notes and looked up.

"That's right, my wrist, like this," and he made a short hook through the air and hit some imaginary chin with the inside of his wrist. "It worked all right, but the next day I was black and blue from my wrist to my elbow."

"Will you have to do that to Ambers?" somebody asked him.

"No, I'm all right now. I think my hands are in better shape than they've ever been. One or the other's always been sore. Goes back to the old days. Guess sometimes we didn't have enough money to wrap 'em with little tape and gauze. I hurt 'em against Ross and then hurt 'em bad against Davey Day. But between the doctor in London, and that fellow in Paris, and the mud, they're good now. I'll beat Ambers. I dunno how, or how long it will take. But I'll beat him. It won't be the tough fight it was the first time—for me."

Walker said, "the reason it was so close the first time was on account of that cut mouth Henry got. Twenty-six stitches inside his lower lip. Now look," and he pulled down Henry's thick lower lip, in Ubangi fashion, to display the smooth red flesh "That must be a record," Eddie said with a certain pride "Twenty-six stitches is three more than Galento had after the Louis fight.

Champion Finishes Life Story

Armstrong, dazzling in a gabardine, silk handkerchief draped far out of his breast pocket, and a panama, will go to Pompton Lakes tomorrow to begin training. His ale drinking has brought his weight to 143, eight pounds over the lightweight limit, and 18 pounds more than he weighed a little over a year ago, when he won the featherweight title—to which he soon added the welterweight and lightweight crowns.

At Hot Springs he and his long-time friend, Harry Armstrong, finished the book they've been writing for more than a year. It is the story of Henry's life. It traces his course from the time he and Harry left St. Louis, through the era of the breadlines, the verminy flop houses, the park benches, the fights in dirty little clubs, the thieving promoter who escaped with the total receipts of a Mexico City fight that nearly put Henry back in the breadlines, then the first few breaks, the taste of good food, the feel of a bed of his own . . . Money in his pocket. The Dempsey of the brake-beams day lived a life of comparative luxury compared to Armstrong's early struggles.

Now he has about $75,000 poked away, all the clothes he wants, a good wife and a fine child. He has fame and respect, won through his courage and his unparalleled record of holding three titles at the same time. And now, in the prime of his curious career, he has recovered the full use of the weapons of his trade—thanks to a dandy doctor and clumps of compressing mud.

Bobby Riggs, Elwood Cooke Upset in Seabright Tennis

Gilbert Hunt Eliminates Sydney Wood

Guernsey, College Champ, Beats Riggs; 17-Year-Old Kramer Nips Cooke in 2 Sets

By the Associated Press

Seabright, N. J., July 26.—The anticipated storm of upsets which passed over the Seabright singles tournament in the preliminary matches struck with gale force today in the third round and washed out a host of favorites, including Bobby Riggs, the nation's ranking tennis amateur.

Riggs and Elwood T. Cooke, diminutive Portland, Oreg., stylist, who lost the Wimbledon championship to Riggs earlier this summer, were the chief casualties, but two other seeded singles performers—Gardnar Mulloy, rated sixth in the men's draw, and Virginia Wolfenden, who was fourth in the women's seedings—fell by the wayside.

Riggs met his master in Frank Guernsey, jr., of Orlando, Fla., national intercollegiate champion from Rice Institute, losing 7—5, 6—4. The straight-set defeat ended Riggs' hopes of winning the 52-year-old tournament for a third straight year and retiring the silver Seabright bowl.

Riggs on Defensive

The 22-year-old Floridian, who lost to Riggs last winter in Bermuda, outlasted the defending titleholder in a match featured by prolonged baseline rallies. Riggs, slipping about on the grass and never able to rush the net because of the depth of Guernsey's flat drivers, was on the defensive throughout. Guernsey piled up 5-2 leads in each set and threatened to end the match in the ninth game of the second only to have Riggs fight back.

Cooke, like Riggs, was bothered by the excesive heat in contrast with the cool of Wimbledon's courts. He never had a chance against his conqueror, 17-year-old Jack Kramer, of Montebello, Calif. The scores were 6—3, 6—4, with Kramer repeating a victory he scored over Cooke last year at Rye.

Donald McNeil, of Oklahoma City, Okla., who won the French hard court title in the spring, eliminated Mulloy, 24-year-old Coral Gables (Fla.) lawyer, by 7—5, 7—5.

Joining Guernsey, Kramer and McNeil in the quarter-finals round were three seeded players—Bitsy Grant, Frankie Parker and Wayne Sabin—as well as two strong unseeded stars, Gilbert Burt, of Washington, D. C., and Johnny Doeg, former national champion.

Hunt's unexpected victory over Sydney Wood, jr., former Wimbledon champion, ended the hopes of the last competitor of a chance to retire the Seabright bowl. Wood, along with Riggs, held two legs on the trophy and had hopes of getting the third this year. Hunt was even hotter than in previous matches, taking the faltering Wood over the coals in straight sets, 7—5, 7—5.

Crawford Also Beaten

Besides Riggs, the former Wimbledon champions who bowed out were Wood and Australian Jack Crawford who fell before Grant, 6—3, 4—6, 6—4.

Parker accounted for Francis X. Shields, former Davis Cup player, 6—2, 6—2, while Sabin eliminated Ladislav Hecht, erstwhile Czecho-Slovakian internationalist, 3—6, 6—1, 6—3. Doeg scored a 7-5, 6,4 victory over Martin Buxby, of Miami, Fla.

While Miss Wolfenden was being expunged 6—1, 2—6, 8—6, by Helen Bernhard, of New York, three other favorites moved into the semifinal bracket.

Dorothy May Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., easily turned back Marilynn McCrae, of Little Rock, Ark., 6-2, 6—0; Dorothy Workman, of los Angeles, seeded behind Miss Bundy, won 6-4, 6-4 over the Texan, Eunice Dean, and Patricia Canning, Alameda, Calif., youngster, scored 6,2, 6-3 over Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France.

Banker Fan to Rule White Sox Until Comiskey Heir Is 21

President of $2,000,000 Organization to Be Chosen From Bank Given Control

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 26.—A banker, undoubtedly a White Sox fan, will be elected president of the Chicago club of the American League.

So said Edward Eagle Brown, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, today. Control of the White Sox, a $2,000,000 property, for at least eight years was placed in the hands of the bank under the terms of the will of the late Louis J. Comiskey, owner and president of the club. The power of the bank will be absolute until Comiskey's son, Charles A. Comiskey 2d, becomes 21, and after that the bank will control part of the stock until he is 35.

"Our plans are not complete," said Brown, "but the first step will be to select a man to take Mr. Comiskey's place. It is too early to say who he will be, but I can tell you the bank has plenty of good baseball fans, and one of them will get the job."

This is not the first time that bankers have controlled baseball clubs in the American League. St. Louis bankers assumed control of the St. Louis Browns upon the death of Phil Ball in 1933, and directed affairs of the club until it was sold in 1937.

The New York Yankees are guided by trustees under the presidency of Edward Barrow, chosen after the death of Col. Jacob Ruppert.

7-Up A. C. Player Hurt as Team Wins

Al Hebrew, 7-Up A. C. third baseman, painfully injured his leg sliding home unsuccessfully in the fourth inning of the Drinkmen's Industrial League game with Russell Motors yesterday, but he was the hero of the game anyway. His triple with the bases loaded brought 7-Up out of a 3-2 deficit and was the big factor in an 8-4 victory.

With its victory, an upset considering that Russell was at the top of the League standings, 7-Up dropped the leaders back into a second place tie and allowed Heurich undisputed lead. Lanny Birch gave Russell nine hits yesterday, but his teammates rapped out 13 off Tommy Doonis.

Pirates Beat Phillies, Take Second Place

Win Double-Header, 3-1, 5-3; Climb From Sixth In Week; Arnovich Hurt

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, July 26.—A determined bunch of Pirates stepped into second place in the National League today by taking both ends of a double-header from the last-place Phillies, 3-1 and 5-3.

The Pirates climbed into second from sixth position in a week. Their double win today helped them out of a tie for second with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Both games brought some sparkling fielding, featuring Elbie Fletcher, Pep Young and L. Waner for Pittsburgh, and Jack Bolling for the Phils.

Snapping out of a slump which saw him hit safely only once in 19 times at bat, Morrie Arnovich, Philly leftfielder, got five consecutive safeties before being stopped by a mishap in the second inning of the nightcap. On second after doubling, Arnovich was hit on the head by a throw from Catcher Ray Mueller. He walked from the field unaided and a later examination showed only a slight bruise.

Red Sox Split With Chicago; Errors Rife

Boston Loses First, 8-1; Wins Second, 6-5; Foxx Homers Twice

By the Associated Press

Boston, July 26.—After piling up a total of nine errors, the Red Sox settled down today and split a double-header with the White Sox by coming from behind for a 6-5 victory in the nightcap. During the opener, Chicago's Bill Dietrich slowballed himself into an 8-1 win, thanks to the lusty slugging of "Gee Gee" Walker.

The first five Boston miscues were made during the first game and they provided the Chisox with four unearned runs. Walker's pair of singles, a double and a triple figured in most of the other scores.

The Red Sox booted four more fielding chances during the first four innings of the second game to trail 4-0. Jimmy Foxx then went into action, much to the delight of the crowd of 21,000, and drove in five runs with his twenty-second and twenty-third homers, and a two-bagger with two mates aboard.

That mighty barrage put the Red Sox into a 5-5 tie in the eighth. They hammered in the winning run against Lefty Thornton Lee, who went the full distance, after Gene DeSautels, Bobby Doerr and Lou Finney singled with two out in the ninth.

Nats-Tigers List 'Stone Day;' To Pay Off Farm Mortgage

JOHNNY STONE

Teams Whose Uniforms He Wore for 11 Years Will Meet in Benefit

The two clubs to which Johnny Stone devoted his 11-year career in the major leagues—Detroit and Washington—will play a "Johnny Stone Day" double-header September 17 on the Tigers' next visit, it was announced yesterday.

The game scheduled for Monday, September 18, will be moved up a day for the occasion honoring the husky outfielder whose playing days were cut short by illness only last May.

Between games, Johnny will be presented with a check from President Walter O. Briggs, of Detroit, and Clark Griffith, owner of the Nats, in recognition of his service with the two teams—six years with the Tigers and five with the Nats.

Clubowners Griffith and Briggs rejected the plan to give Stone a percentage of the receipts, preferring to donat a lump sum and thus assure their former player a sizeable check. The joint check of the two owners will be sufficient to pay off completely a considerable mortgage on Stone's 88-acre farm at Tullahoma, Tenn.

Promoter to Sign 20 'Bug' Pilots

Determined to avoid a recurrence of Tuesday night's shortage of drivers, Promoter Jimmy Frattone moved today to sign up at least 20 drivers for next Tuesday's midget auto races.

Frattone explained that 18 drivers were scheduled to come here Tuesday but five were eliminated when their cars cracked up. The others just didn't bother to show. However, because of the phenomenal success of the midgets here, the track is assured of good drivers in the future.

10,000 See Opening Races of Ten-Day Meeting; Dead Heat Run in First Event

Special Dispatch to The Post

Bel Air, Md., July 26.—Ten thousand fans, who turned out to help the Harford County Fair Association usher in its ten-day summer meeting, saw Royal Business, the property of Capt. Ewart Johnston race 6½ furlongs in 1:19 to land the Bel Air Inaugural.

It was a sizzling horse race from flag fall to wire. Jay McNamara's Chance Queen cut out the early running. Turning for home, Sammy Palumbo, who had been notified that his wife had given birth to a daughter in a New York hospital, sent Royal Business into the lead to win handily. Chance Queen took the place from Mrs. E. L. Bull's Tuleyries Lin and four others, including Santa Prince, the favorite.

The meeting's initial race produced a dead heat for the purse between E. R. Pike's Seplin and Mrs. Janon Fisher, jr.'s Navigation.

Miss Judy Johnson, one of America's few women trainers, is confined to the Union Memorial Hospital in Baltimore, as a result of injuries sustained while schooling Battalion, a steeplechaser belonging to T. T. Mott, of Washington. The accident happened here this morning.

15-1 Shot Wins Plater Race At Empire

Port Wales, With Nash Up, Comes From Behind in Stretch

By the Associated Press.

Empire City, N. Y., July 26.—A featureless card was offered here this sweltering, humid afternoon, with the fifth race, for 2-year-old platers of $5,000 to $4,000 classification, providing the most interesting attraction. Port Wales, owned by Mrs. Dion K. Kerr and the longest priced horse in the field of five, came from behind to score by a length at odds of 15 to 1. Ronnie Nash guided the colt over the 5½ furlongs distance in 1:07 flat.

Arnold Hanger's 7-to-1 chance, Quamora, was second by a head. Hi Gold, also an outsider, finished third by another head but was disqualified for bothering Ken's Pop in the stretch. The latter was awarded the show. Pimlico Queen, which wound up far in the ruck in the Lassie Stakes at Arlington Park in her previous start, actually ran last but received fourth money.

Pimlico Queen, a close second choice at 3 to 2, showed her usual early speed while taking a length lead over Ken's Pop. With the exception of Quamora, the field was well bunched during the run around the bend. As they hit the stretch, Pimlico Queen folded up.

Foreign Deals In U. S. Shares At Boom Level

SEC Puts Value At 11.4 Billions From '35 to '37

From 1935 through 1937 total transactions for foreign account in American securities on the New York Stock and New York Curb Exchanges were valued at about $11,400,000,000, resulting in a net purchase balance of $1,160,000,000, according to a study released yesterday by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

"In other words," the commission states, "for every dollar of net purchase balance foreigners traded $10 worth of securities. Another indication of the character of foreigners' trading activities is given by the fact that total reported trading in American securities for foreign account from 1933 through 1937 aggregated 2½ times the average value of foreign holdings."

The study prepared by the S. E. C. trading and exchange division, declares that foreign participation in the American stock market probably was at a higher level and of more importance during most of the period of 1933 to the middle of 1938, than it had been at any time since the World War.

Some of the other facts disclosed in the study are briefly as follows:

(1) Transactions of investment companies amounted to between three and four per cent of the total volume of trading on stock exchanges from 1933 through the middle of 1938.

(2) Investment companies reported considerable purchase balances as a result of their transactions in portfolio securities in 1933 and 1935. During 1936, 1937 and the first five months of 1938, sales of portfolio securities exceeded purchases.

(3) Reported ordinary transactions totaled over 83,000,000 shares in about 69,000 transactions. Sales of 49,000,000 shares exceeded total purchases by about 15,000,000 shares.

Flour Bag Order Aids Cotton Growers

New York, July 26 (AP).—An order for 2,500,000 flour bags was announced today by the Cotton Textile Institute as a "major victory" in a campaign to boost home consumption of American cotton. The order, it was said, rises out of a shift from jute bags by the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., Nation-wide grocery chain.

"Henceforth the company will use cotton instead of jute bags for the 1,500,000 barrels of flour consumed annually by its bakeries," said Paul B. Halstead, secretary of the institute. This involves more than 2,500,000 large bags, made from over 2,100 bales of cotton, which in turn are the product of approximately 5,000 acres of land."

World Tin Output At 9,600 Tons in May

New York, July 26 (AP).—International tin research and development council reported today that world tin production in May totaled 9,600 tons, compared with 12,600 in May, 1938, and bringing the total for the first five months of 1939 to 54,100 tons, compared with 70,400 in the like 1938 period.

The council estimated the May tin consumption at 13,500 tons compared with 16,500 in May, 1939. The first five months' consumption was 63,400 in 1939 compared with 69,700 in 1938.

Wheat Prices Reverse Trend, Rise 2⅛ Cents

Other Grains Also Score Gains, Corn Advancing 1¾ Cents

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 26.—Wheat climbed 2⅛ cents a bushel late today in the best advance since the market's downward turn two months ago. Other grains also scored gains of a cent or more after shaking off early lethargy. Corn gained as much as 1¾ cents.

Buying was stimulated by reports of deterioration in parts of the domestic and Canadian wheat belts, poor spring wheat threshing returns, damage in western parts of the domestic corn belt and improved flour sales. Light marketings of corn also helped the upturn.

September wheat on the Board of Trade advanced 2⅛ over the previous close to 63⅜, December 1¾ at 64½ and May 1½ at 66⅜. Closing prices were 1⅛-1⅞ up, September 63⅛-63, December 64⅜-½.

Corn closed 1⅛-1¾ up, September 39¾-⅞, December 40⅞-41; oats 1⅜-1¾ higher; soy beans ⅛ higher to a cent off; rye 1-1½ higher, and lard 20 to 23 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Stock Prices Advance With Late Rally; Steels, Motors Unaffected By Strike Talk; Treasury Bonds Up

New York, July 26.—Trading was at a more restricted pace on the stock exchange today and prices moved irregularly, closing with a rally that placed the list up an average of 0.10 point for the day. Turnover amounted to 891,810 shares, which would have been considered good a few weeks ago but which is considerably smaller than we have had since the current upswing got under way.

Sentiment in the Street remained constructive and the indication that the wave of profit taking, which brought small declines for the first two days of the week, had apparently spent itself, was encouraging to the bullish forces.

Pathe Most Active

Pathe Film stepped forward as the individual feature, displacing Loft as the most active stock and claiming the attention of the more speculative traders. It closed up 1⅜ and made a new high for the year. Loft continued active, but since the publication of the Pepsi-Cola estimated earnings it has been moving within a more restricted range. Columbia Gas continued to be the favorite among the utilities, and was the day's second most active stock, advancing ¾.

Steels, Motors Higher

Motors and steels did not appear to be adversely influenced by strikes and talk of more strikes. Chrysler added 1⅝ and motors a good fraction, while Steel was up nearly a point and Bethlehem a point. Tire stocks were more prominent on the tape than usually, Norwalk breaking into the list of active stocks along with United States Rubber, each advancing a fraction. Anchor Hocking Glass enjoyed a spirited demand, rising about 2 points.

Midweek trade news did nothing to stir speculative enthusiasm. Power output, while showing a small decline of 1.3 per cent as compared with the previous week, was 10.1 per cent ahead of that for the same period last year. The review of the steel industry by "Iron Age" confirmed earlier reports of progress in this field. The midsummer date of 60 per cent came sooner than expected, it said, and it foresees a higher rate when automotive buying for 1940 models gets under way.

Splending Debate of Interest

Debate on the Administration's spend-lend bill, which is the piece of remaining legislation most interesting to the financial district, did not appear to advance the proposal any further and the Street has hopes the bill will be killed or at least cut down drastically. The assertion of Majority Leader Barkley, repeated again today, that the loans will be of such a nature that the Government will recover all that is loaned, is regarded among those trained in the ways of finance as super wishful thinking.

Loans Called Bad Risks

Obviously, a major portion of the loans that would be sought from the Government would be loans which a bank would not care to make. The banks are bulging with excess reserves and lendable funds. They would like to employ this money and consequently they are ready to take any reasonable chance with a borrower. While there are without doubt some sound loans which are not accommodated by the present banking system, these are the exception. The Government would be flooded with applications and it stands to reason that a good proportion of its risks would be of the danger type. To assert that all money loaned will be recovered by the Government and hence will not add to the national debt is a preposterous assumption. As Senator Byrd characterized the measure today, it is another spending scheme, masquerading as a lending measure.

One of the business indices which the bullish forces are counting upon is the relatively low level of inventories. Statistical information on this important factor was revealed today in the June report on wholesale sales of the Department of Commerce. The cost value of inventories on hand at the close of June, as reported by 1,757 wholesalers, was 1.1 per cent less than a year ago and 0.4 per cent down from the beginning of the month. The department reported that in each month this year sales have been up and inventories lower, as compared with the corresponding months of 1938.

Local Transits Decline

Featuring the downside of today's market was Interborough Rapid Transit, which broke following publication of the terms agreed upon to effect unification. Mayor LaGuardia was quoted as believing the terms would not cause a flutter in the market but Interborough dropped to a new low at 3¼. Its close of 3¾ was off 1¾ points for the day, or about 32 per cent.

Bond Trading Steady

Listed bonds remained in modest demand today, save for a few issues affected by special considerations. Turnover was $5,850,000. United States Treasury bonds struggled slightly higher, and best corporate investments were maintained. Bankers made good progress with available new issues. Speculative bonds of nearly all descriptions were in mild demand, and even the foreign section had some good spots.

Treasury Issues Gain

Gains in long-term United States Treasury bonds ranged from 1/32 to 8/32 point, but the short-dated securities were neglected. Guaranteed bonds of the farm and home corporations were hardly traded. While investment bankers industriously were distributing their new offerings, high grade listed bonds were well maintained, at or close to highs of the year.

Railroads in Demand

Medium priced railroad bonds mostly were marked upward by small fractions, and there also was some demand for borderline and default bonds. B. & O. issues especially were under inquiry. Past due Interborough bonds fell on local traction developments, but other issues of the group made progress. Holding company bonds and industrial convertibles were quiet and firm. Communications bonds turned uncertain.

Williams Named Chief Executive Of C. & N. Railway

Chicago, July 26 (AP).—R. L. Williams, stocky veteran with a reputation for efficiency and economy, became chief executive officer of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway today. Williams, vice president of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad, was appointed to his new post by Charles M. Thompson, trustee of both lines.

While he was teamed with Thomson and President Charles T. O'Neal, the C. and E. I. became the first class A railroad in the Nation to be re-organized under the Federal bankruptcy act, although completion of the procedure has not yet been approved by the stockholders.

To his position as head of the vast North Western system he brought 35 years of experience in virtually all phases of the rail industry—a record of service capped by many money-saving improvements. He declined to make a statement on the future policy of the road pending a study of the system and conferences with the executives in charge of the various operations.

Sloan Visions New Products As Trade Spur

Basic Elements Exist For Sound Revival, Says G. M. Head

By the Associated Press

New York, July 26.—Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., chairman of the General Motors Corporation, today pictured business recovery built on new products from industrial research laboratories. The essential elements exist, he said, for "a broad and sound upturn in economic activity, with an accompanying promotion of new job opportunities."

SLOAN

Released in advance from a forthcoming quarterly report to stockholders, Sloan's comments included:

"In air transport it is apparent that we are just now entering upon an era of vast opportunity and growth. To the youth of today 'wings over the earth' spell opportunity unparalleled.

"Railroad transportation, too, is moving rapidly into new ground. From research have come new Diesel-powered locomotives to speed up service and reduce costs. Studies in fuel economy and many other developments indicate a bright future for the railroad—the backbone of our transportation system.

"In no field of industrial research has greater progress been made during the depression years than in chemistry. The science of synthetics, through which new substances are brought into being from coal, milk, cotton, wood, from water and the elements of the air, seem to broaden with each forward step."

With these "fundamental elements" for business improvement, he contended, "there is awaited only the conviction in the minds of people everywhere that our national economic policies will be revised so as to warrant the taking of the essential risks on the part of investors and the spending of money for durable goods to capitalize the manifest opportunities."

Otis Elevator Pays 25 Cents on Common

New York, July 26 (AP).—Otis Elevator Co. directors today declared a dividend of 25 cents a share on the common stock payable September 20 to holders of record, August 25. This compared with previous payments of 15 cents quarterly.

Net profit for the six months ended June 30 was $1,578,157, or 69 cents a common share, compared with $1,135,217, or 47 cents a share, in the like 1938 period.

Business Index Declines in Week

New York, July 26 (AP).—Time magazine's index of business conditions declined last week from 95.7 to 95.3, after advancing for four successive weeks.

A drop in spending in large financial centers was responsible for the decline in the index, which is designed to reflect changes in underlying conditions likely to affect the volume of business. Spending activity in trade centers continued to improve.

Cotton Futures Continue Rise, Up 7 to 13 Points

New York, July 26 (AP).—Another burst of buying lifted cotton futures to new high levels for the season today.

Off to a wobbly start when Liverpool prices came in lower than due, demand soon gained momentum and pushed the list nearly $1 a bale higher at one time. Closing prices were 7 to 13 points ahead.

Considerable inquiry was attracted by the weekly weather report showing too much moisture in some sections of the belt and too little in others. A leading spot interest took large blocks of March cotton, against sales in Liverpool, believed to be transference of hedges abroad. Trade and spot houses were active buyers and foreign sources bid for contracts.

Cottonseed Oil

Speculative buying on the possibility of Government support for cottonseed oil pushed the futures market up as much as ¼ cent before a late reaction today. Closing prices were 12 to 15 points higher on sales of 273 lots.

In view of the recent sharp declines, the market easily responded to demand. September closed *5.87; October, *5.92; December, 6.07; January, *6.12; March, 6.20.

Crude oil advanced in line with futures with the best offer in the Southeast and Valley at 5 cents. Late bids were reported in Texas at 4½ cents.

Grid Eagles To Protect Davey O'Brien

Little All-American To Have Better Care Than in College Games

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, July 26.—The Philadelphia Eagles of the National Professional Football League are going to be mobilized into sort of a "bodyguard" this year for their ace recruit—Texas Christian's little Davey O'Brien.

When the 150-pound All-American quarterback turned out with the Eagles squad today or their first practice session in 90-degree heat, Bert Bell, team president and coach, declared he was going to see that the little pigskin wizard "gets all the protection he needs" in the professional game.

"O'Brien will have better protection in professional football than he ever had in college," Bell promised. "At Texas Christian he had two or three big men like I. B. Hale and Ki Aldrich to protect him, but with the Eagles he will have 10 big men to look after him."

Davey didn't seem as concerned about the future. Said he:

"I'm glad to get back in the harness. I'm not worried about the big fellows."

Although Bell proudly proclaimed O'Brien "the greatest quarterback" of the gridiron, he declared the Eagles' maneuvers wouldn't "necessarily" be a one-man show revolving around the fellow who kicked and passed Texas Christian to an undefeated, untied season.

"But," said Bell, "the boys think O'Brien can pass them to a championship. They're all tickled to death to have him."

Another star making his first appearance in a professional uniform today was Franny Murray, University of Pennsylvania's ace back and expert kicked, who is expected to be an able second to O'Brien's kicking.

Pepco Nine Beats Union Printers, 2-0

Pepco nine left no doubt of its intention of winning the second half of the United States Government League yesterday when it edged out Union Printers on the West Ellipse, 2-0, and went far out in front in the league standings.

It was a scoreless pitching duel between Pepco's Morgan and Mosedale until the sixth inning, when an error, two walks and pinch-hitter Garvey's single accounted for the only runs of the game.

—On Fishing

The northeaster that very successfully broke up the marlin fishing off Ocean City over the week-end has gone on its way, and the boats are again bringing in the big billed fish. Saturday was the only day they missed — the few boats going out returning before 10 o'clock because it was impossible to fish. The half-dozen or so out late Sunday came in with four marlin and half a dozen big tuna, and any assortment of albacore, dolphin and blues.

ACKERMAN

The same blow prevented Lawrence Richey and Floyd Akers from adventuring in the blue waters of the Gulf Stream after blue marlin with Fred Rooks in his Chocatows. Those are the breaks in this game of offshore fishing, however, and wise boatmen don't go 70 and 80 miles off for several days in the face of wind.

The trip wasn't a complete failure, for while he was fishing off Winter Quarter on Thursday, Larry grabbed ahold on his bootstraps and lifted himself out of our class—those who haven't, into that of those who have—with the taking of a swell fish that had all the tricks of a past master. It was landed in an hour and a half minutes, and with quite a little kabitzing.

Paul Drury, president Drury Realty Corporation, fishing with Capt. Lev Raymond, caught two marlin, one in the fast time of 13 minutes, and the other in 21. Judge Bill Snow, also fishing on the Lev-Lou with Drs. W. T. Burch and Bill Wilkins, of Alexandria and Swepson Earle, of Baltimore, caught one, tagged and released it. Due to the heavy sea, it was nip and tuck for awhile as to just who or what would be tagged, but when it slipped back over the boat's quarter it was the fourth for the week and the seventh white marlin that has ever been tagged.

Capt. Crawford Savage fishing a Philadelphia party on his Hilda II tagged and released two. and Capt. Chester Gray on the Hilda, one. The first three were caught by Swepson Earle and Dr. Robert A. Nesbit on Capt. Bill Bunting's Miss Maryland.

Everyone is asked to join in this work which, within a few years, should give Bureau of Fisheries scientists some idea of the growth, migrations, and habits of these pelagic gamesters. But this request applies only in the event that it is not the angler's first marlin; that the fish is not wanted for a matter of record or mounting, or for any other purpose than merely to show prowess on the part of the angler for the plaudits of a dock-gallery that grows to real proportions as the marlin fleet comes in.

A tagging was thought offered by Lawrence Richey while we were returning last year from an offshore excursion, and it was passed on to Charles Jackson, acting commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries, who saw much to be gained from the idea. It was not until just a few weeks ago that any real tagging was accomplished. Slow at first, there is little doubt that these operations will gain real momentum. Already 20 boats are equipped with complete tagging outfits, which include a marked rubber band, impervious to salt water, to slip over the bill and a double celluloid disc for inserting through the gill-cover.

On these boats will be found authorization from the Bureau of Fisheries, only renewable for the following year after a fish has been tagged and released. So far anglers need no urging to help in this activity, for the thought that their fish, caught hundreds of miles away from where it was tagged, might bring knowledge of inestimable value, is incentive enough.

Medalist Dot Kirby Advances in N. C.

Asheville, N. C., July 26 (AP).—Losing but a few strokes to par with a steady performance from tee to cup, Medalist Dorothy Kirby, of Atlanta, Ga., faced the field today into the second round of the Biltmore Forest Invitation Golf Tournament with an 8 and 7 victory over Mrs. Stewart Cramer, jr., of Charlotte.

Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., advanced with a 5 and 3 victory over Mrs. Jack Brown, of Greensboro, N. C.

Old Va. League May Be Revived

Lynchburg, Va., July 26 (AP).—Lynchburg and Roanoke took steps at a meeting here today to revive the Old Virginia League.

Representatives of the Chamber of Commerce of the two cities started the ball rolling by agreeing to ask for a conference with Judge W. G. Bramham, president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues and with Ralph Daughton, president of the Piedmont League.

It was brought out the revivied Virginia League might include Roanoke, Lynchburg, Norfolk, Richmond, Portsmouth and possibly Petersburg, Newport News and Danville.

the eighth after Bobby Estalella had flied out as a pinch hitter. George Case drove a single to center, but for no reason at all wandered to second base on West's foul pop to Greenberg, and was doubled up by Greenberg's throw to first.

Krakauskas had no part in the Tigers' third run. It was scored against Alex Alexandra, who got the pitching job in the ninth and immediately put himself in trouble by serving Hank Greenberg a two-base hit that banged against the wall in deep left. Greenberg was sacrificed to second and trotted home while Travis was making a whale of a stop and throw to first on Fox's hard smash far to his right.

Man of the Month

By Walter Johnson.

Joe Krakauskas was a hero in defeat for the Nats yesterday and to him goes the chief award of points in the Man of the Month contest.

To Krakauskas, four points, because he pitched brilliant ball in holding the Tigers to five hits and a pair of runs in eight innings.

To Cecil Travis, three points, because his two-bagger paved the way for the Nats' only run and because he played a spectacular game at shortstop.

To Jimmy Vernon, two points, because he drove in the Nats' lone run and later contributed a single.

Taft Wright	31	Buddy Lewis	8
Cecil Travis	25	Jim Bloodworth	8
Joe Krakauskas	21	Bobby Estalella	7
Dutch Leonard	18	Mickey Vernon	6

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

Talk of transfers from the WPA to the NYA has meant only one employe so far . . . at least where the District is concerned. B. J. Bjorkland, formerly with the finance division of the local WPA is the lone example of a trade-about that was originally supposed to affect dozens. Other current transfers from the staff of the NYA supply fund to the regular District NYA staff are Mary Stensic and Louise Frye.

The Patent Office outing to Marshall Hall is only going to last one day—August 5—but the program of events scheduled is so lengthy that it sounds as if it ought to take a week.

Here are a few of them, and still more are being planned right along.

A baseball game between those old feudists, the examiners and clerks. And the umpires are going to be girls—members of the Commerce Department's soft ball team. There'll be a bald headed man's contest, with sparsely covered craniums competing for a prize; and a rolling pin contest for wives who have the best throwing arms.

Sam Boyd is chairman for the event, and his aides are J. Voegler, L. Miller, Miss A. Scallon, Miss P. Menkal and Mrs. I. Bellinger.

From 1919 to 1938, for every dollar spent by foreign tourists in this country, Americans abroad put out $5. Statistics from the Commerce Department show that foreign expenditures totaled $1,000,000,000, and American, $5,400,000,000.

Liners, flying the American flag, did a standing room only business of $55,000,000 in 1929. The same year, however, foreign vessels practically had them hanging to the masts with a top take of $221,000,000. Does this prove that Mr. and Mrs. U. S. A. prefer French, German or Italian cooking, once they get away from home?

U. F. W. A. Local 2, of the Agriculture Departmnt, is shaking a finger and sending a letter to Ernest Kreutgen, postmaster, at Chicago, who, it is reported, has boycotted consultations with union delegates.

Says M. E. Gale, secretary of the Agricultural group, "Local 2 has for several years enjoyed cordial relations with the administrative officers of the department and has negotiated with them on numerous matters of employe interest. The local has provided a medium through which employes may voice their aspirations and has been an efficient device for the settlement of grievances—to the inestimable improvement of morales."

Santa Claus doesn't live at the North Pole anymore! So don't send out any expeditions to find him. He lives right here in the United States according to the specialties division of the Department of Commerce, which says that American knick-knacks for the young now lead the world.

Germany, which used to be Santa Claus' headquarters south of the Arctic Circle, has lacked raw materials with which to manufacture the wind-er-ups and Japan isn't doing so well either. It has the raw materials but no permit to use them on mere toys.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Sometimes experts make mistakes themselves. A wild sacrifice bid, overcalled by an expert, upset his calculations and proved his downfall on today's hand. He not illogically placed the player with distributions, strength, particularly when he turned up with no top cards and the expert let his adversary win two trump tricks when he needn't have lost any. The result was that the expert was defeated two tricks.

Today's Hand

North-South Vulnerable
NORTH DEALER

NORTH: ♠ K 7 4 ♡ K Q 6 4 3 ◇ 9 ♣ A 9 8 5

WEST: ♠ 8 2 ♡ A 10 2 ◇ K 10 7 4 ♣ J 7 6 4

EAST: ♠ Q 10 5 ♡ J 7 5 ◇ A 8 6 5 3 2 ♣ 10

SOUTH: ♠ A J 9 6 3 ♡ 9 8 ◇ Q J ♣ K Q 3 2

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ◇	2 ♠	3 ◇
3 ♣	5 ◇	Pass	Pass
5 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 4 ◇

The cards and the bidding are shown in the box. East's five-diamond bid was a happy venture, for at that contract he would have been defeated three tricks for a loss of 500 points not vulnerable, as against the 600-odd points he would have lost had the adversaries bid and made a game.

A low diamond was led by West, and East won with the ace returning his singleton club, the king in the South hand winning. Declarer's problem was not simple. He could immediately ruff his losing diamond but that would preclude his taking a trump finesse against West, whom he placed with the spade queen on the bidding.

He decided to knock out the heart ace, believing East had that honor, in an attempt to develop a discard for his losing diamond. West won with the ace and immediately led back a club, East trumping with the spade five. East returned a heart, West covered South's nine with the ten, and the king in dummy won. Declarer was now down one, his diamond discard was established, but he still had the trump suit to worry about. He led a low spade from dummy and East slyly played the ten. Declarer won with the ace, led the jack and, when West ducked, he let it ride. He knew now that East had held two spades originally but he could not believe that he had three. When East won with his lone queen to win a set of two, declarer threw down the remainder of his cards and cried: "It's impossible, partner. He couldn't have three spades and leap to five diamonds." "But he did," chortled East.

Had South played the hand normally, winning the club return, ruffing a diamond in dummy, playing the spade king and finessing the jack, five-odd would have been made easily.

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

M. K. Rawlings

Chapter 51.

HE SAID, "Now why don't you take a dress length of this black alpaca and start new?"

She fingered it.

"Shore is purty. How much did you say? Oh——"

She turned away. She retreated into her pride.

"I said 'brown' and I meant 'brown,'" she said coldly.

She bought spices and raisins for a Christmas cake.

The request was so absurd that he gaped at her. Penny winked at him. He wheeled quickly so that she could not see him smile. She meant to buy something to surprise him for Christmas. Penny would have thought of a better excuse to get him out of the way. He went outside and stared at the boy who tended the ferry. The boy sat and studied his own knees. Jody picked up bits of limestone and aimed them at the trunk of a live oak up the road. The boy watched him furtively, then came behind him without speaking and picked up bits, too, and hurled them at the tree. The contest continued wordlessly. After a time Jody thought his mother would have finished and he ran back into the store.

His mother said, "You comin' with me or stayin' with your Pa?"

He stood hesitant. Grandma Hutto would bring out cake or cookies the moment he was in her house. On the other hand, he could never get enough of hearing his father talk with other men. The matter was settled for him by the storekeeper's handing him a licorice stick for himself. It would keep body and soul together for the time being.

He said loftily, "Me and Pa'll foller."

She went out. Penny watched after her. He frowned. Boyles was stroking the fur of the deer hides with approval.

Penny said, "I'd figgered on takin' cash for them hides. But if you'd as soon trade me a dress length o' that black alpacy, why, I don't much keer."

Boyles said reluctantly, "I'd not do it for anybody else. But you've traded here a long time. All right."

"Best cut it up and wrap it before I change my mind."

Boyles said wryly, "You mean before I change mine."

The scissors snipped crisply across the alpaca.

"Now gimme silk thread to match and a card o' them glass buttons."

"I got money for it. And put the alpacy in a box, do it rain this evenin'."

Boyles said good-naturedly, "Now you've cheated me, tell me where a man can go to shoot him a wild turkey for Christmas dinner."

"I cain't no more'n tell you where I'm fixin' to hunt one myself. They're mighty scarce. The plague got 'em bad. But you cross the river about where Seven-Mile Branch flows into it. You know that cypress swamp with two-three good big cedars in it, jest southwest o' the run? You work through there——"

THE GOOD male talk was beginning. Jody sat down on a cracker box to listen. There were no other customers and Boyles came out from behind the counter and pulled up a straight chair and an old cowhide rocker beside the thumper stove for himself and Penny. They got out their pipes and Penny shaved Boyles a pipeful of his own tobacco.

"Nothing like home-raised tobaccy for satisfaction," Boyles said. "You plant a patch for me this spring. I'll pay you as high as anybody. Now go on—southwest of the run——?"

Jody chewed on his licorice stick. The rich black juice filled his mouth and the talk filled another hunger, back of his palate, that was seldom satisfied. Penny told of the flood in the scrub. It had been bad along the river, too, Boyles interrupted to say, but the river had carried most of the water away as fast as it fell. The banks had been flooded, and Easy Ozell's shack had swayed back and forth in the wind and finally capsized.

"He's living in Grandma's shed," Boyles said, "and happy as a pine borer in a fresh log."

Penny recounted the wolf hunt and the bear hunt; told of the rattler's strike, which the Forresters had not thought to mention. Jody lived the summer over again, and it was better than when it happened, the way Penny told it. Boyles was as fascinated, and sat leaning forward, forgetting to smoke. A customer came in and he left the stove grudgingly.

Penny said, "Your Ma's been gone a hour-two, boy. You best run on to Grandma's. Tell 'em I'll be along directly."

The licorice had long been swallowed. It was getting on toward noon and he was famished.

"Will we eat dinner at Grandma's?"

"Why, yes. If we wasn't invited, your Ma'd of been back by now. You go on now. And carry that forequarter to her yourself."

He went, a little drugged with Penny's tale-telling.

Grandma's tidy yard was recovering from the effect of the high water. The river had been over its bank here and her fall flower garden had been washed away. There was unaccustomed debris here and there. The second planting was thriving, but there was no bloom, except of shrubs close beside the house. The blooms of the indigo had fruited into small black seedpods, curved like scythe blades. Grandma was inside the house with his mother. He heard their voices and as he stepped up on the porch and looked through the window he saw the flickering of flames on the hearth. She saw him and came to the door.

HER EMBRACE was friendly, but it lacked something of enthusiasm. The two Baxter men were more welcome without Ma. There was no plate of cookies anywhere in sight. The smell of cooking, however, came from the kitchen. Otherwise he could scarcely have endured his disappointment. Grandma Hutto sat down again to talk with his mother with a tight-lipped patience. His mother was behaving no better. She looked critically at Grandma's frilled white apron.

She said, "No matter where I be, I like to dress plain in the mornin'."

Grandma Hutto said tartly, "I wouldn't be caught dead without a frill on me. Men-folks like a woman dressed pretty."

"I was raised to call it indecent, to dress to please the men. Well, some of us plain folks has had to go pore on this earth. We'll git our irills in Heaven."

Grandma Hutto rocked rapidly.

"Now I don't want to go to Heaven," she announced.

Ma Baxter said, "Reckon there's no danger."

"Why wouldn't you want to go, Grandma?" Jody asked.

"One thing, the company I'd have to keep."

Ma Baxter ignored this.

"Another thing's the music. There's nothin' played there, they claim, but harps. Now the only music I like is a flute and a bass viol and an octave harp. Unless one o' your preachers'll guarantee that, I'll jest refuse the trip with thanks."

Ma Baxter's face was stormy.

"Another thing's the food. Even the Lord likes the incense of roasted meat before him. But accordin' to the preachers, folks in Heaven live on milk and honey. I despise milk and honey makes me sick to my stummick." She smoothed her apron complacently. "I figger Heaven's only folks' longin' for what they ain't had on earth. Well, I've had near about ever'thing a woman could want. Mebbe that's why I've got no interest."

Ma Baxter said, "Includin' Oliver runnin' off with a yaller-headed chipperdale, I reckon."

Grandma's rocker beat a tune on the floor.

"Oliver's up-standin' and fine-lookin' and women has allus followed him and allus will. Take Twink, now. She's not to blame. She'd never had a fine thing in her life and then Oliver takened a notion to her. Why wouldn't she foller him? The pore child's an orphan." She shook out her frills. "Left an orphan at the mercy of the Christians."

JODY FIDGETED in his chair. The coziness of Grandma's house was chilled, as though the doors were open. It was more woman-business, he decided. Women were all right when they cooked good things to eat. The rest of the time they did nothing but make trouble. Penny's step sounded on the porch. Jody was relieved. Perhaps his father could straighten them out. Penny came into the room. He rubbed his hands together by the open fire.

He said, "Now ain't this fine? The two women I love the most in all the world, waitin' for me by the hearth-fire."

Grandma said, "If the two women loved each other as good, Ezra, all'd be well."

"I know you two don't git on," he said. "You want to know the reason? You're jealous, Grandma, 'cause I'm livin' with Ory. And Ory, you're jealous 'cause you ain't as handsome as Grandma. Now hit takes a bit of age to make a woman handsome—I don't say purty—and time Ory's got a bit of age on her, mebby she'll be handsome, too."

It was impossible to quarrel around his good nature. The two women laughed and bridled.

Penny said, "What I want to know, is the Baxters invited to eat o' the fat o' the land, or be they obliged to turn around and go home to cold cornpone?"

"Now you know you're welcome, day or night. And I do thank you for the deer meat. I only wish Oliver was here to eat it with us.

"What's the news from him? We was right hurt he didn't come to visit us before he put to sea."

"It was a long time before he got over his beatin'. Then he had word there was a boat in Boston wanted him for mate."

"I reckon there was a gal in Floridy wanted him for the same thing, eh?"

They laughed together and Jody laughed with them for relief. Grandma's house was warm again.

She said, "Dinner's ready, and if you scrub creeturs don't eat hearty my feelin's 'll be might hurt."

Dinner was not as lavish as when Penny and Jody came alone. Yet there were furbelows to impress Ma Baxter that were very tasty. The meal was friendly.

Ma Baxter said, "Well, we made up our minds to come to the Christmas doin's. We couldn't come last year, for we'd not come empty-handed. You figger a fruit cake and a bait o' syrup candy'll be welcome for my share?"

"Nothin' better. How about you-all spendin' the night and havin' Christmas with me?"

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

AFL Defending Gompers' Aims, Green Declares

Fighting 'Assaults From All Sides,' He Says at Cigar Makers' Fete

The American Federation of Labor is defending the philosophy of Samuel Gompers "against assaults from all sides," William Green, president, said yesterday at exercises launching the three-day Diamond Jubilee of the Cigar Makers International Union of America.

The exercises, held in the shadow of the Gompers Memorial at Tenth street and Massachusetts avenue northwest, were opened by three trumpeters in the braid jackets of 75 years ago. Gompers, president of the A. F. of L. from 1886 until his death in 1924, was a member of the cigar makers union and its delegate to the 1881 labor congress that formed the American Federation of Labor.

The cigar makers' union is the second international union in American history to celebrate a seventy-fifth anniversary. The first was the typographical union, founded in 1853.

The position of the A. F. of L. today, Green said in his memorial address, is the same as that expressed once by Gompers and now inscribed on the base of the monument:

"No lasting gain has ever come from compulsion. If we seek to force, we but tear apart that which united is invincible. . . ."

Green was introduced by John M. Baer, Republican Representative from North Dakota from 1917 to 1921 and now a cartoonist for Labor. Baer pointed out the Cigar Makers Union was the first to use the union label.

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Senator Pepper, of Florida; Senator Mead, of New York, and Representative Wood, of Missouri, all Democrats, will deliver radio addresses from 10:15 to 10:45 p. m. tomorrow over the Mutual Network in the concluding ceremony of the jubilee celebration. Green, Ira Ornburn, secretary-treasurer of the union label trades department of the A. F. of L. and past president of the cigar makers' union, and R. E. Van Horn, present president of the union, also will speak.

Green to Present Scroll

The addresses will follow the July presentations of "The Labor Parade," a monthly transcribed 15-minute radio program broadcast over Station WOL. The program will trace the growth and development of the cigar makers' union.

At 11 a. m. today Green will present an illuminated scroll to Van Horn in recognition of the seventy-fifth anniversary at the A. F. of L. headquarters, Ninth street and Massachusetts avenue northwest.

Hundreds of letters of congratulations have been received, Van Horn announced, from President Roosevelt, members of the Cabinet, members of Congress, governors, mayors, other international unions and from many individuals in public life.

John R. Steelman, director of the United States Conciliation Service, and John B. Colpoys, United States Marshal for the District, sent floral wreaths to the union offices in the Carpenter Building, Tenth and K streets northwest.

Two flags flew from the windows of the union offices yesterday during the exercises at the Gompers Memorial. One was the American flag presented to the union by Gompers shortly before his death. The other was the cigar makers flag, made of a blue background with white letters and a huge diamond symbolizing the anniversary.

14-Point Traffic Program Offered By Keystone Club

A 14-point platform for improvement of local traffic conditions was advanced yesterday by the Keystone Automobile Club.

Opening of school playgrounds for increased traffic safety, extension in the use of parking meters, pedestrian control, and regulation of bicycle operation were among the planks which won approval of 98 per cent of Keystone members officials said.

Other features of the traffic control program included opposition to the diversion of motor vehicle tax funds; to further motor vehicle taxes; to decentralization of the Department of Motor Vehicles and Traffic; to unreasonable parking restrictions; addition of off-street parking facilities; opposition to destruction of any free bridge in favor of a newly constructed toll bridge, such as proposed between Havre de Grace and Perryville, Md.; support for continued elimination of congestion at Peace Cross in Bladensburg; opposition to jailing of motorists picked up for minor traffic violations while awaiting arrival of bondsmen, and support for a comprehensive program of education to bring about greater reduction in accidents.

200 Children to Act In Safety Pageant

Two hundred children will participate in a safety demonstration at the Banneker Recreation Center, Georgia avenue and Howard place northwest, Friday afternoon. The demonstration is being sponsored by the Pleasant Plains Citizens Association in co-operation with District police safety enforcement.

A miniature street scene will be constructed on the playground, with traffic signals. Children on tricycles and miniature automobiles will play the part of drivers, while others will act as pedestrians and policemen, according to officers of the citizens association.

Liquor License To Be Restored

The Class "C" liquor license of the Hillow Cafe, 3300 block of M street northwest, recently revoked by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, will be returned to the cafe December 1, the Commissioners ruled yesterday.

Following an appeal last week on the decision, the Commissioners reduced the penalty, which they thought was "too severe." The license was revoked by the A. B. C. board following a hearing on a complaint of selling liquor to an intoxicated minor. The license is in the name of George Joseph Hillow, jr.

Boy Joshes Father After Peak Rescue

12-Year-Old, Lost 8 Days, Tells Dad 'You Can't Take It'

By the Associated Press.

Bangor, Me., July 26.—Alternately joking and sobbing about his eight terrifying days in the wilderness around Mount Katahdin, Donn Fendler rested tonight in the sanctuary of a hospital room with his joyous parents.

The courageous 12-year-old Boy Scout reached Eastern Maine General Hospital after a canoe and ambulance trip from a camp on the east branch of the Penobscot River to which he staggered yesterday.

Keeps Burlap "Bed"

Clutched in his hand when he was taken to his room after a heart-quickening meeting with his father was a dirty, tattered burlap sack in which he slept during his harrowing wanderings through 35 miles of mountain and forest.

"I wouldn't part with it for a million dollars," Donn grinned.

Emaciated, sore and cut by the rocks and underbrush, the boy made a brave show of strength for his father, after a touching greeting from his mother on the river bank, where he was transferred from canoe to ambulance.

When Donald Fendler, the boy's father, saw his son brought into the hospital it was his first sight of him since a week ago Monday, when they became separated on the summit of Mount Katahdin during a hike.

"How are you, Pa?" asked the boy.

"I'm pretty good, but we were kind of worried about you," answered the elder Fendler.

"You can't take it," smiled Donn, then, solicitously, "How's your eye, Pa?" (The father's eye was injured during the hunt.)

Missing Boy Found Safe

Laporte, Minn., July 26 (AP).—Russell Jensen, 6, of Albert Lea, Minn., was found tonight, apparently unharmed by his three days in the forest where 600 seachers had hunted for him.

Meanwhile, Canadian provincial officials tonight announced F. C. Lambert, 53, of Chicago, had returned safely to his camp on Manitou Lake a few hours after he was reported missing Sunday.

C.I.O. Warns Of Dangers in Changing Act

Would Increase Industrial Warfare, Hillman Tells Congress

By International News Service.

Although changes in the national labor relations act at this session of Congress appear unlikely C. I. O. leaders appeared yesterday before both House and Senate Labor Committees to urge defeat of pending amendments.

Sidney Hillman, C. I. O. vice president and president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, declared that "emasculation" of the act by adoption of proposed amendments would increase industrial warfare. He declared some of the biggest employers in the country, such as U. S. Steel, General Electric and Radio Corporation of America, are "not participating in employer attacks on the National Labor Relations Board."

Labor Unity Discussed

Matt Meehan, secretary of the West Coast Longshoremen's Union, of which Harry Bridges is president, charged the proposed amendments were intended to "permit employers and A. F. of L. unions to combine to fight C. I. O. unions." He asserted that in the West Coast strikes, employers and the A. F. of L. "acted together in an attempt to deny workers the right to unions of their own choosing."

Senator Allender (Democrat), of Louisiana, presiding at the hearing, told Hillman he believed that if the matter of labor unity were left to the membership of the C. I. O. and A. F. L. they would get together in six or eight months.

Textile Minimum Urged

Replying that his "only disagreement" was that it would take less time than that, Hillman said:

"I am convinced that if it were left to the membership of the A. F. L. and C. I. O. all would vote unanimously for a unified labor movement."

On another front a labor representative described the proposed 32½ cent hourly minimum for the textile industry today as a "cure for the pestilence of low wages." He was John Abt, representing the C. I. O.'s Textile Workers Union of America.

WHAT TO DO FOR ECZEMA ITCHING AND BURNING

Wash the affected parts with Resinol Soap and warm water to soften scales and crusts. Resinol Soap is suggested because it contains no excess of free alkali, and cleanses the tender skin so carefully. Dry by patting with a soft cloth—do not rub.

Many doctors recommend an oily ointment because it holds the medication in contact with the irritated skin surface, giving prolonged action. Resinol Ointment meets this requirement, and does even more. For nearly 45 years it has been—and still is—successfully used to relieve quickly the itching and burning of eczema. It contains soothing ingredients that aid healing.

Use Resinol Ointment today and enjoy comfort tomorrow. Get a jar, also a cake of Resinol Soap, at any drug store. For free sample, write to Resinol, Dept. 87, Baltimore, Md.
